§ 773 Admissibility at subsequent trials

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

There is authority that judicial admissions are admissible at a subsequent trial of the same suit ³⁰ and in another civil or criminal proceeding involving the same issue. ³¹ However, according to some authorities, while judicial admissions are admissible in evidence on a subsequent trial, they are not binding in the subsequent trial upon the party who made them. ³² Other courts state that unless the circumstances virtually eliminate the possibility of error, a judicial admission in one action is not conclusive in another action. ³³ In addition, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure state that any admission made by a party under the rule governing requests for admissions is for the purpose of the pending action only and is not an admission for any other purpose nor may it be used against the party in any other proceeding. 34

There is some authority that potentially incriminating testimony which is compelled in federal court may not be used in a subsequent state prosecution for a crime based on the same facts. 35 Likewise, testimony of a defendant would not be admissible as substantive evidence on retrial after reversal of a conviction, if the first trial court improperly denied suppression of the defendant's inculpatory statement obtained in violation of defendant's Miranda rights, in the absence of proof that defendant would have testified as he or she did, even if the illegally obtained statement had not been erroneously admitted. 36

(2). Admissions and Declarations in Pleadings [774-784]

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table Go to Supplement

Some courts hold that a party's assertion of fact in a pleading is a judicial admission, 37 provided the party making the assertion fails to amend it 38 or withdraw it. 39

A statement of fact by a party in a pleading is an admission that the fact exists as stated, and as such is admissible against such party in favor of his or her adversary in the pending action, assuming that it is necessary to treat it as evidence at all. 40 Under the Federal Rules of Evidence, 41 in civil cases, statements made in the course of court proceedings, such as pleadings 42 or depositions, 43 may qualify as party-admissions. State courts may also find adverse pleadings admissible at trial as admissions of a party-opponent. 44 If the pleader is both a party and a witness and his or her testimony is inconsistent with a prior pleading, then the pleading may qualify as both an inconsistent statement and an admission. 45

Courts may consider such party-admissions in pleadings to be substantive evidence of the facts admitted. 46 Pleadings may also be used to impeach. 47 However, some jurisdictions do not allow impeachment by legal conclusions in pleadings, 48 or impeachment by certain types of alternative pleadings. 49

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure state that averments in a pleading to which a responsive pleading is required, other than those as to amount of damage, are admitted when not denied in the responsive pleading. 50 However, averments in a pleading to which no responsive pleading is required or permitted are taken as denied or avoided. 51

◆ Observation: In accord with the general rule concerning self-serving declarations, 52 there is some authority that a self-serving statement or allegation in a pleading, such as a bill in equity 53 or a petition or complaint 54 is generally inadmissible in behalf of the pleader in the action in which it is filed.

§ 775 Effect of admissions in pleadings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Stipulations and admissions in the pleadings are generally binding on the parties and the court. 55 Admissions in the pleadings are sometimes considered to be conclusively established, 56 and factual statements in the pleadings are considered conclusive unless they are amended or withdrawn. 57 While they lose their conclusive character once they have been amended or withdrawn, they continue to be evidentiary admissions which may be refuted or explained by the party against whom they are used. 58 A party whose pleading is admitted as an admission against interest is entitled, if he or she can, to overcome by evidence the apparent inconsistency, 59 and it is competent for the party against whom the pleading is offered to show that the statements were inadvertently made, were not authorized by him or her, or were made under a mistake of fact. 60 In addition, a party against whom a single clause or paragraph of a pleading is offered may have the right to introduce other paragraphs which tend to destroy the admission in the paragraph offered by the adversary. 61 However, explanations of inconsistency between a pleading and testimony go to the weight and not the admissibility of a pleading. 62

◆ Caution: Some courts have said that pleadings prepared and filed by counsel hired by a party are prima facie regarded as being authorized by the party. 63

§ 776 Necessity of introducing pleading in evidence

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Generally, admissions in pleadings cannot be regarded as evidence unless the pleadings are introduced at the trial at the proper time and in the proper way. 64 In a case where a party to an action seeks the benefit of a statement in a pleading of his or her adversary as an admission against the interest of the adversary, 65 the statement in the pleading must be offered in evidence before it can be used as an admission. 66 An abandoned or superseded pleading is out of the case, so far as admissions by rule of pleading are concerned, and therefore, admissions in such may be taken advantage of only by introducing the pleading, or so much of it as contains the admission, in evidence. 67 However, some jurisdictions hold that the pleadings upon which the cause is tried are before the court for all proper purposes. 68

§ 777 Verified and unverified pleadings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Pleadings are admissible as admissions of the verifying party. 69 In most instances, it has been held that if a party does not verify, authorize, or adopt a pleading, the pleading or its allegations are not admissible against such party. 70 However, there is some authority holding that such circumstances affect only the weight of the pleading and not its admissibility in evidence. 71

§ 778 Alternative pleadings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Generally, a statement made as part of an alternative fact pleading, which was made in good faith, cannot be used as an admission against the pleader. 72 The admissions made by a pleader in one count or plea are not admissible against the pleader on an issue raised by his or her denials or averments made in another count or plea. 73 In other words, where inconsistent counts or defenses are pleaded, the admissions in one of them cannot be used to destroy the effect of the other. 74 Consequently, a pleading may not be construed as a judicial admission against an alternative or hypothetical pleading in the same case. 75 This rule encourages parties to plead not only what they know is factually true, but also any fact, if they believe there is good ground to support it and it would tend to be defeated if allegations in the pleadings were admissible as evidence; parties would hesitate to make notice-giving allegations at the risk of their being used as evidence. 76 Pleadings of this nature are directed primarily to giving notice and lack the essential character of an admission. 77 To allow such pleadings to operate as admissions would render their use ineffective and frustrate their underlying purpose. 78 Thus, under the rule, alternative fact allegations made in good faith and based on genuine doubt are not admissions against interest so as to be admissible in evidence against the pleader. 79 The pleader states facts in the alternative because he or she is uncertain as to the true facts, so that the pleader is not "admitting" anything other than uncertainty, an essential objective of alternative pleading being to relieve the pleader of the necessity and therefore the risk of making a binding choice, which is no more than to say that the pleader is relieved of making an admission. 80 Consequently, some jurisdictions hold that one cannot impeach with an inconsistent pleading which includes alternative allegations against multiple parties or disjunctive specifications of negligence or fault against any party. 81

§ 779 Superseded, amended, or abandoned pleadings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Although there is some authority to the contrary, 82 for instance, where a pleading is erroneously and inadvertently made, 83 generally a pleading containing an admission against the pleader, whether he or she is the plaintiff, 84 the defendant, 85 or an intervenor, 86 and which has been amended or abandoned, is admissible in evidence. A superseded pleading is admissible against the party on whose behalf it was originally filed if it contained admissions or statements of fact against the interest of such party. 87

Despite the general rule of admissibility, there is a division of authority as to whether a superseded pleading constitutes a judicial admission. Some courts state that a statement by a party in a superseded pleading may constitute a judicial admission, but only if it is made by a party to the action in which it is sought to be used; 88 while others state that the superseded part is not a judicial admission, but merely an admission which, while not conclusively binding on the pleader, may form the basis for a grant of a summary judgment if not denied by affidavit or otherwise. 89 There is authority, however, that evidentiary admissions may be made in pleadings that have been superseded. 90

Admissibility of amended or abandoned pleadings is particularly the case where the pleader has verified the pleading, 91 and while some courts hold that an unverified pleading does not have the effect of an admission, 92 in most jurisdictions the pleading is admissible whether verified by a party or not, at least where a proper foundation has been laid to show that the pleading offered was that of the party or was approved by the party. 93

Some cases recognize exceptions to the rule of admissibility where the pleading is signed or verified by counsel rather than by the party, 94 for instance, where the matter constituting an admission follows a general denial or is contained in inconsistent pleas or defenses, 95 or where it amounts to a conclusion of law. 96

§ 780 Withdrawn pleadings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Generally, a pleading containing an admission against the interest of the pleader, whether the plaintiff ⁹⁷ or the defendant, ⁹⁸ which has been subsequently withdrawn, is nevertheless admissible. In most jurisdictions the pleading is admissible whether verified by the party or not, at least where a proper foundation is laid to show that the pleading offered was that of the party or was approved by such party. ⁹⁹ The Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and the Federal Rules of Evidence state an exception to the general rule of admissibility of withdrawn pleadings where a plea of guilty was later withdrawn. ¹ The Uniform Rules of Evidence also state this exception, but additionally refuse to admit an admission of the charge, or an offer to plead guilty. ² Qualifications of and exceptions to the rule of admissibility have sometimes been recognized as to withdrawn pleadings in the case of pleadings signed or verified by counsel rather than the party. ³

There is a division of authority as to whether withdrawn pleadings constitute judicial admissions. Some courts state that statements made by a party in a withdrawn pleading may constitute judicial admissions, but only if they are made by a party to the action in which they are sought to be used; ⁴ while others state that, when a pleading is withdrawn, the superseded portion disappears from the record as a judicial admission, but exists as an utterance once seriously made by a party and, when admitted in evidence, may be properly considered by the court or jury as an item of evidence in the case. ⁵ There is authority, however, that evidentiary admissions may be made in pleadings that have been withdrawn. ⁶

§ 781 Admissibility in subsequent proceeding

View Entire Section

There is authority that a party's pleadings in a prior case are admissible against that party in a subsequent action as an admission ⁷ or declaration ⁸ against interest, provided they are within the established bounds of relevancy. ⁹ Statements contained in pleadings filed in prior actions remain admissible even though the action in which they were filed has been withdrawn or dismissed. ¹⁰ They are also admissible even though the pleading in which they were contained was not verified. ¹¹ The prior pleadings, however, must be indeed inconsistent with party's present position and must be drawn under the party's direction or with his or her consent, 12 and hypothetical inconsistent pleadings may not be used as admissions in other law suits. 13 However, in some jurisdictions which do not recognize the admissibility of a pleading containing an admission against the interest of the pleader where it has been amended or abandoned, an exception is made where such pleading is offered in evidence in a proceeding other than that in which the pleading was originally filed. 14

Statements made in prior pleadings may be considered evidential admissions, 15 and not conclusive. 16 The party who made the admission may give evidence that the pleading was filed on incorrect information without his or her actual knowledge. 17 However, this evidence goes only to the weight not to the admissibility, of the pleading. 18

◆ Observation: In deciding the admissibility of prior inconsistent pleadings, some courts have applied a balancing approach under the Federal Rules of Evidence 19 to determine whether the probative value of the prior pleading is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury, or by considerations of undue delay, waste of time, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence. 20

§ 782 --Strangers to original proceeding

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Generally, a petition, complaint, or reply containing an admission is admissible against the pleader in another action, on behalf of a stranger to the former action. 21 In a number of cases, however, under the particular circumstances involved, it has been held or recognized that a pleading filed by the plaintiff, 22 or by the defendant, 23 was not admissible against the pleader, on behalf of a stranger to the former action. In some instances the admissibility of such pleadings has been denied for the reason that the pleadings were not verified, it being held that a pleading filed by the plaintiff or complainant, 24 or by the defendant, 25 which was not signed or verified by him or her but was signed or verified by his or her attorney, was not admissible. 26 In other cases, however, such pleadings have been held admissible even though not signed or verified by the plaintiff or complainant, 27 or by the defendant. 28

§ 783 --Guilty pleas; admissibility in subsequent civil actions

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

When relevant, the plea of guilty to a charge may be admitted into evidence in a subsequent civil action as an admission of the act charged. 29 When a guilty plea to a criminal charge is admitted in a subsequent civil action, it may be under the auspices of an admission by a party-opponent. 30 Under the Federal Rules of Evidence, in civil cases, statements made in the course of court proceedings, such as guilty pleas, may qualify as party-admissions. 31 In addition, in the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary, 32 the general rule is that the record in a criminal case showing a plea of guilty by the accused is admissible in a subsequent civil action against the accused arising out of the same offense, as his or her deliberate declaration or admission against interest, 33 insofar as the plea of guilty is relevant to the issues in the civil case. 34 However, although a guilty plea in a criminal proceeding may be admissible as a declaration against interest and may be considered by the trier of fact in a subsequent civil trial involving the same facts and occurrence as that out of which the criminal prosecution arose, it does not as a matter of law conclusively establish the truth of the facts upon which the judgment of guilt was rendered. 35 Thus, courts have refused to apply the doctrine of collateral estoppel where the defendant has pled guilty. 36

Although there is some authority that the withdrawal of a plea of guilty does not affect its admissibility as an admission against interest in a subsequent civil action turning upon the same facts, 37 both the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 38 and the Federal Rules of Evidence 39 provide that evidence of a plea of guilty which was later withdrawn or any statements made in the course of any proceedings regarding such plea, is not admissible in any civil proceeding against the defendant who made the plea or who was a participant in the plea discussions, unless another statement made in the course of the same plea has been introduced and the statement in all fairness ought to be considered contemporaneously with it. 40 The Uniform Rules of Evidence have a similar rule except that admissions of the charge or offers to plead guilty, or statements made in connection with either of these, are also not admissible, and the Uniform Rules make no provision for contemporaneous statements. 41

Government may not introduce guilty plea on distribution charge to impeach drug distributor pursuant to 28A USCS Rule 609(a), where distributor pleaded guilty in accordance with written plea bargain, distributor submitted altered tape and gave false testimony in order to obtain better deal, and government, upon learning of false testimony and altered tape, attempted to revoke plea bargain and added additional counts of perjury and obstruction of justice, because guilty plea lacks finality of verdict, since it might be withdrawn if bargain is revoked, and so it is not conviction within meaning of 28A USCS Rule 609(a). United States v Franklin (1993, MD Fla) 829 F Supp 1319, 7 FLW Fed D 377.

In prosecution for burglary and criminal attempt to commit sodomy, based on defendant's breaking into his sister-in-law's trailer and threatening to tie her up and take her into woods, trial court properly admitted evidence of defendant's guilty plea 10 years earlier to kidnapping and rape of another victim who had flat tire on interstate, where facts in cases were similar in certain details, particularly threat of kidnapping and violence used by defendant to attempt sodomy, and evidence had sufficient connection to current charges to be relevant and probative. Hooks v State (1994) 212 Ga App 878, 443 SE2d 532, 94 Fulton County D R 1561.

§ 784 --Traffic violations

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

There is some authority that guilty pleas to traffic offenses are admissible in civil actions arising from the same occurrence, although the pleading party may contest the admitted fact. 42 Similarly, there is authority that pleading guilty to a traffic citation constitutes an admission against interest, but does not conclusively establish the violation. 43 In some cases, however, a distinction has been drawn between a plea of guilty to an offense which involves conduct in issue in a civil case and statements made by one in the course of paying a traffic fine under a so-called "cafeteria" system for minor traffic offenses, the latter not constituting an admission of the fact that the declarant did the act charged in the traffic ticket. 44 In some jurisdictions, statutory provisions exclude evidence of pleas of guilty to traffic offenses. 45 The rationale for this approach is that the decision to pay a traffic citation and forgo a judicial appeal does not bear a sufficient relationship to whether the party acquiesces in or admits to the charges recited in the citation. 46 Common experience demonstrates that the payment of a traffic citation is simply a matter of expedience. 47 Some courts compare payment of a traffic fine or parking ticket to a plea of nolo contendere. 48 Consequently, some courts hold that an admission of guilt in the traffic court is admissible in evidence in a subsequent civil proceeding arising out of the same accident, but the submission of payment personally or by mail in satisfaction of a traffic fine is not the evidentiary equivalent of a guilty plea in open court. 49 In any event, a guilty plea to violation of a statute making it unlawful for driver of vehicle to negligently fail to maintain proper control has been found to be competent and admissible evidence, although not conclusive, on issue of negligence in civil trial. 50

4. Types of Admissions or Declarations [785-812]

a. Statements Against Interest [785-793]

(1). In General [785-787]

§ 785 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Under the Federal Rules of Evidence 51 and the Uniform Rules of Evidence, 52 a statement by an unavailable declarant, which was at the time of its making so far contrary to the declarant's pecuniary or proprietary interest or so far tended to subject the declarant to civil or criminal liability or to render invalid a claim by the declarant against another that a reasonable person in the declarant's position would not have made the statement unless he or she believed it to be true, is not excluded by the hearsay rule if the declarant is unavailable as a witness. Under the Uniform Rules, statements against interest also include statements which so far tend to make someone an object of hatred, ridicule, or disgrace that a reasonable person in the declarant's position would not have made them unless he or she believed them to be true. 53 Various states provide that statements against interest are not excluded by the hearsay rule, 54 sometimes following standards similar to those set out in the Federal and Uniform Rules. 55

Although the Federal Rules of Evidence do not expressly incorporate a requirement that the declarant have personal knowledge of the facts to which the statement relates, such a requirement of firsthand knowledge has always been inherent in the statement against interest exception. 56 Moreover, for the statement to be admissible the declarant must have a conscious understanding that the statement is against his or her interest when made. 57 There must be a showing by either the inherent nature of the statement or by other proof that the declarant knowingly made statements which were against the declarant's interest when made. 58

In addition, the admissibility of a declaration against interest depends upon the declarant's knowledge of the facts stated. 59 Legal conclusions, which are not admissions of fact, are not admissible as admissions against interest. 60 Furthermore, the admissibility of a declaration against interest depends on a satisfactory showing that: (1) resort to such proof is necessary to the discovery of truth; and (2) the proffered evidence is reliable since, absent other motivations, a person ordinarily does not reveal facts that are contrary to his or her interest. 61 The declarant must have no motive to lie. 62

The focus of the declaration against interest exception to the hearsay rule is the basic trustworthiness of the declaration. 63 In determining whether a statement is truly against interest, and hence is sufficiently trustworthy to be admissible, the court may take into account not just the words but the circumstances under which they were uttered, the possible motivation of the declarant, and the declarant's relationship to the defendant. 64 A reviewing court may overturn the trial court's finding regarding trustworthiness only if there is an abuse of discretion. 65

Declarations against interest are generally admitted without reference to the time at which they were made. 66 Both written and verbal declarations are within the rule which renders declarations against interest admissible. 67

◆ Observation: While some courts do not distinguish between declarations against interest and admissions, one court did on the basis that admissions are statements by a party, offered by a party opponent, while declarations are statements by nonparties, and applying this distinction, the statement against interest exception to the hearsay rule is not meant to apply to the statement of a party. 68

§ 786 Death or unavailability of declarant

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Although there is some authority to the contrary, 69 generally, the admissibility of a declaration against interest depends not only upon its relevancy, 70 but the unavailability of the declarant as a witness. 71 The Federal Rules of Evidence and the

Uniform Rules of Evidence both require unavailability for statements against interest. 72 Thus, before an extrajudicial statement can be introduced as a declaration against interest, there must be showing that the witness is unavailable at the time of trial. 73 It is generally agreed that a declaration against interest which is relevant to the issues in the case is admissible in evidence where it is shown that the declarant has died, 74 and both the Federal and Uniform Rules state that unavailability includes situations where the declarant has died. 75 The Federal and Uniform Rules also state that unavailability includes those situations where the declarant is absent from the hearing and the proponent of a statement has been unable to procure the declarant's attendance or testimony by reasonable means, and situations where the declarant persists in refusing to testify despite a court order to do so, 76 and some states provide that a declarant is unavailable as a witness when the declarant cannot or will not appear in court and testify to the substance of his or her statement made outside of court, 77 even despite an order of the court to do so. 78 In some jurisdictions, the condition of unavailability includes illness, 79 or insanity, 80 which precludes the declarant's appearance as a witness, either by personal presence or by deposition, 81 and the Federal and Uniform Rules also state that unavailability may be due to physical or mental illness. 82 Some states provide that absence from the jurisdiction, 83 may render a declarant unavailable. However, some courts require that the party offering the declaration against interest make a good faith effort to secure the attendance of the declarant, 84 and the Federal and Uniform Rules provide that a declarant is not unavailable if due to the wrongdoing of the proponent of a statement for the purpose of preventing the witness from attending or testifying. 85

In any event, declarations against interest are generally not admissible if the declarant is available as a witness, 86 unless he or she can properly refuse to testify, for instance, on the ground of possible self-incrimination. 87 Although a court may believe the better approach is having the declarant take the stand and assert the privilege, affording the trial judge an opportunity to rule formally on the matter, courts may hold that when it would be mere formalism to abjure the merits of the declarant's claim, in the exercise of its discretion, the court may find that declarant is unavailable, without the requisite formality. 88

The Federal and Uniform Rules 89 and state rules 90 provide that unavailability as a witness includes situations in which the declarant testifies to a lack of memory on the subject matter of the statement. Lack of memory must be established by the witness' own testimony which clearly contemplates the production and cross-examination of the person. 91

Declarations against interest are not admissible in a case involving a declarant who has actually testified, 92 except for the purpose of impeaching such witness. 93

Courts have said that whether a hearsay declarant is unavailable when the out-of-court statement is offered as a statement against penal interest under rule is a preliminary question to be determined by the trial judge. 94 The proponent of the evidence has the burden of establishing the unavailability of the witness by a preponderance of the evidence. 95 If the evidence in the records supports the trial court's ruling, taking into account the standard approved, the ruling will not be disturbed on appeal. 96

◆ Observation: According to some courts, the fact that there is adequate opportunity for cross-examination of the declarant is one of the indicia of the trustworthiness of an extrajudicial statement, not under oath, by the declarant that he or she, and not the

§ 787 Admissibility of collateral statements

Some authority holds that a declaration against interest is admissible as an entirety, including parts not against interest, if the latter are substantially connected with the same subject matter as that covered by the part against interest. 98 Some courts permit the introduction of collateral statements contained within a declaration against penal interest inculcating the accused, which afford a reasonable assurance of trustworthiness. 99 It has been said that Congress did not intend to constrict the scope of a declaration against interest to the point of excluding collateral material that may fortify the statement's disserving aspects. 1 However, there is also authority holding that, to the extent a statement not against the declarant's interest is severable from other statements satisfying the requirements for statements against interest under the Federal Rules of Evidence, such statement should be excluded. 2

The admission against interest exception to the hearsay rule has encompassed declarations against the pecuniary³ or proprietary⁴ interest of the declarant. However, the Federal Rules of Evidence have extended the range of interests under the exception. The Federal Rules of Evidence also allow the admission of hearsay statements potentially subjecting the declarant to criminal liability⁵ or civil liability.⁶ Many states as well have expanded the admission against interest exception to include penal interests.⁷ Under the Uniform Rules of Evidence, statements against interest also include statements which so far tend to make someone an object of hatred, ridicule, or disgrace that a reasonable person would not have made them unless they were true,⁸ and some jurisdictions that have not enacted the rules also include under the admission against interest exception to the hearsay rule statements which create such a risk of making the declarant an object of hatred, ridicule or social disapproval in the community that a reasonable person in the declarant's position would not have made it unless it were true.⁹ However, other courts have not been persuaded that an admission against social interests enjoys the requisite indicia of reliability to qualify as an exception to the rule against hearsay.¹⁰

§ 789 Penal interest

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In many criminal 11 and civil 12 cases, extrajudicial declarations of the commission of a criminal act have been held not to be admissible in evidence. The rationale for this exclusion has been that such confessions are untrustworthy 13 and might be fabricated. 14

However, in an increasing number of jurisdictions, declarations against penal interest are admissible, 15 both in civil cases 16 and criminal ones, 17 at least in special circumstances. Some courts which have not recognized the admissibility of extrajudicial confessions in criminal cases generally, have held admissible the declaration against penal interest of a third person where the state relied on circumstantial evidence alone to establish the guilt of the accused. 18 Moreover, there is authority that, in the case of a confession by one person which exculpates the accused, the exception for declarations against interest must be recognized as a matter of due process. The accused may introduce testimony of another person's confession related to the witness, and to preclude the accused from doing so by an application of the hearsay rule violates the accused's due process right to call witnesses in his or her own behalf. 19

Both the Federal Rules of Evidence 20 and the Uniform Rules of Evidence 21 provide in identical language, that statements against interest, admissible when the declarant is unavailable, include statements which so far tend to subject the defendant to criminal liability that a reasonable person in that position would not have made the statement unless the declarant believed it to be true, with the qualification that a statement tending to expose the declarant to criminal liability and offered to exculpate the accused is not admissible unless corroborating circumstances clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement. Some states have similar standards for admitting statements against penal interest. 22 This exception does not apply only to statements which amount to direct confessions of criminal responsibility, since otherwise Congress would not have used the phrase "tended to subject." 23

The statement need not be made directly to persons who the declarant knows can cause his or her prosecution. 24 A declaration against penal interest is a declaration against penal interest regardless of whether it is made to a judge, to a police officer, or to a neighbor over the back fence. 25 Its character is not altered by a change in interlocutors although its indicia of reliability may. 26

The possibility of criminal culpability must not be too remote, 27 and a statement that may be construed as against penal interest is nevertheless inadmissible where it is too ambiguous to subject the declarant to prosecution. 28 In order to qualify as a declaration against penal interest, there must be a direct link between the statement and the crime. 29

In determining whether a statement against the declarant's penal interest is admissible, some courts have stated that the minimal requirements that a proponent must show are:

(1) the statement must have been truly an admission of an unlawful act; 30

(2) the statement, at the time of its making, must so far tend to subject the declarant to criminal liability that a reasonable person in the declarant's position would not have made the statement unless he or she believed it to be true; 31

(3) the statement is trustworthy; 32

(4) the corroborating circumstances clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement, 33 or, at least there are some corroborative circumstances or other evidence of trustworthiness; 34 and

(5) the declarant must be unavailable. 35

A grant of immunity withdraws the threat of prosecution and an otherwise inculpatory statement is then no longer against the declarant's interest. 36 De facto immunity, as where the declarant is already serving multiple life sentences, has a similar effect. 37 Similarly, a statement is not against penal interest where it is made after the declarant has pled guilty to some charges and all others have been dismissed pursuant to a plea bargain. 38 In order to be admissible, the statement must be against the declarant's interest at the time made. It is therefore not sufficient that it can be interpreted as evidence of a subsequent wrongdoing, 39 nor is it sufficient where the declarant's jeopardy has passed. 40 However, the fact that the declarant is terminally ill at the time the statement is made does not mean the statement is not against penal interest where there is no indication that the declarant will not be sentenced for the crimes to which he or she allocuted. 41

A statement which on its face is contrary to the declarant's penal interest and thus disserving to the declarant may be a self-serving statement when examined in context, 42 as when a suspect in custody admits guilt and implicates another person in order to curry favor with the authorities, 43 or admits criminal conduct in order to seek favorable treatment at a sentencing hearing. 44 Generally, if a declarant admits sole responsibility for a serious crime, the statement is generally prima facie against interest so as to satisfy this requirement of the rule. 45 Likewise, when the declarant unknowingly speaks to informants or undercover agents, the statement is usually admissible under the exception. 46 However, if the statement is clearly self-serving, as when the declarant is seeking favorable treatment in return for cooperation, the statement may be deemed not against his or her interest and thus may fall outside the exception. 47 In addition, statements that demonstrate that a defendant is sorry for his or her actions, and did not mean to commit the crime are statements for, rather than against, penal interest. 48

Statements which are in fact against penal interest are, nevertheless, inadmissible where they are in the declarant's pecuniary interest in that they are made in connection with a civil suit in which the declarant was a defendant. 49 Moreover, a confession to one crime which was made in order to support a defense against the charge of a more serious crime, although technically against interest, is in reality one for the declarant's penal interest, not against it. 50

◆ Observation: While many courts do not address the issue, some courts recognize that it is not against the declarant's penal interest to exculpate the accused, but nevertheless have ruled in favor of the admissibility of such exculpatory statements. 51

§ 789 ----Penal interest [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Coconspirator's statement that another coconspirator would give witness something other than money, and other conspirator's telling witness that he would be delivering kilogram of cocaine were tantamount to admissions that they were dealing cocaine and therefore admissible as declarations against their penal interest. United States v Saccoccia (1995, CA1 RI) 58 F3d 754, subsequent app (1995, CA1 RI) 63 F3d 1.

In action by school boards against dairies alleging conspiracy to artificially raise price of milk supplied to schools, testimony of former general manager of dairy given as government witness in criminal action against dairies on price-fixing charges is not admissible to prove fraudulent concealment tolling statute of limitations, where manager testified under grant of use immunity, because testimony was not against his penal interest since he avoided prosecution by testifying, and it was not against his pecuniary or proprietary interest since he was not likely aware of possibility of antitrust action. West Virginia ex rel. McGraw v Meadow Gold Dairies (1994, WD Va) 875 F Supp 340, 1995-1 CCH Trade Cases ¶ 70866.

Coconspirator's statement upon arrest, that he had firearm because he had heard that people were sometimes robbed during drug deals and that there was lot of money involved in this deal, was admissible as statement against penal interest; declarant was unavailable because he was fugitive and statement was sufficiently trustworthy since it was made after he was advised of his Miranda rights and nothing indicated he made statement to curry favor with law enforcement officers. United States v Sandoval- Curiel (1995, CA7 Ill) 50 F3d 1389.

In plaintiffs' civil rights action against officer who shot and killed 12-year-old boy, testimony of juvenile during hearing at which he admitted to giving loaded weapon to close friend on playground about one hour before that friend was killed is admissible under T28 803(24), because although juvenile might not have been under oath at time he made statement, statement was against his penal interest and was made after juvenile was fully advised of his rights and seriousness of situation, and in presence of his parents and attorney. Estate of Chlopek by Fahrforth v Jarmusz (1995, ND Ill) 877 F Supp 1189.

Statements inculcating defendant which were made by declarant immediately after her arrest when she had been caught with two kilograms of cocaine were not sufficiently against her penal interest to be admissible under hearsay exception since her conviction was assured for all practical purposes and therefore she had nothing to lose by implicating another person, rather may have been motivated by desire to curry favor with officials. United States v Hazelett (1994, CA8 Mo) 32 F3d 1313, 40 Fed Rules Evid Serv 75.

Defendant's statements to a psychiatrist were not admissible as statements against penal interest pursuant to G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(3), even if defendant may assert his own unavailability, because they were not so incriminating "that a reasonable man in his position would not have made the statement[s] unless he believed [them] to be true" where the incriminating statements defendant made to the psychiatrist were similar to statements he had already made to the police; the only additional incriminating information in the statements served only to reduce defendant's potential criminal liability; and the bulk of defendant's statements to the psychiatrist were exculpatory. State v Harris (1994) 338 NC 211, 449 SE2d 462.

§ 790 --Confrontation and reliability requirements

View Entire Section

Some courts state that a declaration against interest admissible under the Federal Rules of Evidence hearsay exception may still run afoul of the criminal defendant's right to confrontation of witnesses, 52 especially in the case of confessions by one person implicating a codefendant. 53 In addition, some courts have said that in order to satisfy statutory requirements and requirements of the confrontation clause, the declaration must be distinctly against the declarant's penal interest and must be clothed with indicia of reliability. 54 Some courts state that a statement's spontaneity is an important factor in determining reliability under the confrontation clause. 55 In addition, the relationship of a declarant and a witness as husband and wife may enhance the reliability of a statement against penal interest. 56

Footnote 53. Bruton v United States, 389 US 818, 19 L Ed 2d 70, 88 S Ct 126, holding that accused's rights under confrontation clause of Federal Constitution's Sixth Amendment are violated where codefendant's statement inculcating accused is admitted at joint trial.

As to statements against penal interest offered to inculcate a defendant, generally, see § 793.

Footnote 54. People v Coble (5th Dist) 65 Cal App 3d 187, 135 Cal Rptr 199, stating that indicia of reliability are lacking where the declaration is made to authorities after the declarant has been arrested and charged with a serious offense or after he has already pleaded guilty to a lesser offense and is awaiting sentencing, and where the statement is exculpatory in the sense that the declarant has blamed a coparticipant for the commission of the greater offense while admitting complicity to some lesser degree.

But see, United States v Seeley (CA1 Mass) 892 F2d 1, 29 Fed Rules Evid Serv 767, stating that the Confrontation Clause does not require special proof that in-court witness is credible in order to admit into evidence testimony as to out-of-court statement against penal interest.

§ 791 --Trustworthiness requirement

The trustworthiness of a hearsay statement against penal interest is a prerequisite to its admissibility. 57 Trustworthiness is not only determined by the existence of corroborating circumstances, 58 but also through examination of the time of the declaration and the party to whom the declaration was made, and the extent to which the declaration is really against the declarant's penal interest. 59 One indication of the trustworthiness of a statement is where the declarant admits individual responsibility for a criminal act 60 and does not attempt to shift culpability but frankly discloses his or her own involvement. 61 Another factor which supports trustworthiness is that the confessor makes a voluntary statement after being advised of his or her Miranda rights. 62

The determination as to whether a third party declaration against penal interest is trustworthy is left to the sound discretion of the trial court. 63 To determine if trustworthiness is sufficiently established, the trial judge should examine both the corroborating evidence and the contradictory evidence. 64 Absent an abuse of discretion, a court will not reverse the trial court's ruling on the admissibility of a statement against penal interest. 65

◆ Observation: According to some courts, relying on a Supreme Court case, 66 there are four indicia of the trustworthiness of an extrajudicial statement, not under oath, by the declarant that he or she, and not the defendant, committed the crime: (1) the statement is made spontaneously to a close acquaintance shortly after the crime occurs; (2) the statement is corroborated by other evidence; (3) the statement is self-incriminating and against the declarant's interest; and (4) there is adequate opportunity for cross-examination of the declarant. 67

§ 791 --Trustworthiness requirement [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Taperecorded conversation between cooperating defendant and codefendant, implicating another codefendant, was properly admitted as statement against interest; implicated codefendant did not question whether codefendant's statements implicated his penal interest and that codefendant was unavailable as a witness because of his status as defendant, and trustworthiness of statement was established by evidence that codefendant had no knowledge that another party participated in setting fire, hence undermining implicated defendant's argument that codefendant had incentive to place blame on him to protect other party. United States v Gio (1993, CA7 Ill) 7 F3d 1279.

Statements made by a codefendant, Williams, proffered where defendant wished to use the statements to show that defendant was not an integral part of the plan to kill a police officer, were properly excluded; Williams, who had not yet been tried, repeatedly invoked the Fifth Amendment when called by defendant; and the trial court ruled that Williams was unavailable as a witness, that the statements were against his penal interest when made and that they were made voluntarily, but that they bore insufficient indications of trustworthiness. The trial court's determination that the statements made by Williams were not trustworthy is well supported by the record. G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(3). State v Brown (1994) 335 NC 477, 439 SE2d 589.

§ 792 --Corroboration requirement

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The Federal Rules of Evidence provide that a statement tending to expose the declarant to criminal liability, which is offered to exculpate the accused, is not admissible unless corroborating circumstances clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement. 68 The Uniform Rules of Evidence 69 and many states 70 also require that corroborative circumstances exist which clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement. The corroboration requirement for the admission of a third party statement against penal interests is generally significant and goes beyond minimal corroboration. 71

The corroboration requirement is to be construed in such a manner as to effectuate its purpose of circumventing fabrication. 72 The trial judge may look beyond the evidence offered in corroboration of the statement to evidence either directly contradicting the statement or contradicting the evidence offered to corroborate it. 73 Where corroboration is insufficient, and evidence indicates that a statement is not trustworthy, it will not be admitted under the Federal Rules of Evidence as a statement tending to expose the declarant to criminal liability. 74 While it has been held that in considering the admissibility of statements offered under the Federal Rules of Evidence as against penal interest, the court should be concerned with the trustworthiness of the declarant and not the credibility of the witness, 75 elsewhere the corroboration requirement has been construed to involve an assessment of the veracity of the witness as well as the reliability of the declarant. 76 The necessary corroboration has been found wanting in many cases of third-party confessions. 77

§ 792 --Corroboration requirement [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: When do corroborating circumstances clearly indicate trustworthiness of hearsay statement tending to expose declarant to criminal liability and offered to exculpate accused, so as to permit admission of statement under Rule 804(b)(3) of Federal Rules of Evidence (28 USCS Appx). 125 ALR Fed 477.

Case authorities:

Codefendant's statement during plea negotiations that defendants had not known of proposed drug exchange at time they entered motel room was not sufficiently corroborated to be admissible as statement against penal interest since codefendant's guilt did not preclude other defendants' involvement and he made many questionable claims during plea negotiations. § 793 --Statement offered to inculcate defendant

View Entire Section

Some courts state that third party declarations against interest which inculcate rather than exculpate the defendant are inadmissible, 78 and the Uniform Rules of Evidence specifically state that statements or confessions offered against the accused in a criminal case, made by a codefendant or other person implicating both himself or herself and the accused, are not within the statement against interest exception. 79 However, other courts allow the admission of statements against interest tending to inculcate the accused provided there are corroborating circumstances which clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement. 80 Nevertheless, there is authority that such statements must be subjected to even more exacting standards than those offered by the defendant to exculpate himself or herself in recognition of the due process protections of defendant's charged with crime including the requirement that guilt be established beyond a reasonable doubt, 81 and some courts provide that the state must present the trial court with evidence that such confessions were so trustworthy that adversarial testing would add little to their reliability. 82 While the Federal Rules of Evidence 83 expressly only require corroboration where an inculpatory statement of the declarant is offered by the defendant to exculpate himself or herself, 84 and some courts provide that corroborating circumstances are only required if the evidence is submitted to exculpate the accused, and not if it is submitted to inculcate the accused, 85 other courts require corroboration of statements inculcating both the defendant and others, since these may be of questionable reliability. 86

The trial court must find that the interest compromised is of sufficient magnitude or consequence to the declarant to all but rule out any motive to falsify. 87 This standard raises a rebuttable presumption of unreliability when the inculpatory declaration is the result of custodial questioning because, in such circumstances, the declarant is likely to have a strong motive to falsify in order to curry favor, shift blame, receive immunity from prosecution or obtain a favorable plea bargain. 88 Indeed, some authorities hold that a third party's statements against penal interest obtained during custodial interrogation should never be received in evidence to inculcate a defendant. 89 When a suspect in custody admits guilt and implicates another person in order to curry favor with the authorities, the statements made are actually self-serving. 90 Moreover, it may be an abuse of discretion to admit against a defendant as a statement against penal interest a codefendant's statement which may be part of an agreement to reduce charges and which minimizes the codefendant's participation. 91 There are a number of reasons which cast doubt on the credibility of an inculpatory statement of a confessing co-defendant who has negotiated a plea bargain, for instance, (1) the confession is custodial and therefor made under potentially coercive circumstances that could not be examined at trial; (2) the desire of the confessor to curry favor from the arresting officer; (3) the confessor's attempt to alleviate the culpability by implicating others; (4) the confessor's feelings of enmity for others in a conspiracy gone awry; (5) the confessor's desire for revenge against a third person; and (6) the confessor's ability to ultimately entertain a favorable plea agreement. 92

In any event, where evidence of another's declaration against penal interest is offered by the State as direct evidence to inculcate a defendant, the statement must be subjected to exacting standards. 93 Some courts have said that it appears likely, as a general matter, that accusatory statements in a co-defendant's confession almost never properly qualify as statements against interest, 94 and some state rules are designed to prohibit the introduction of a statement made by a nontestifying defendant which inculpatates him or her and a co-defendant. 95 However, there is some authority that the fact that a statement of a third-party declarant inculpatates not only himself or herself but also expressly implicates the accused in a criminal conspiracy is an indication of the trustworthiness of the statement, 96 and authority that a statement implicating the declarant in a criminal conspiracy is a statement against interest within the meaning of the Federal Rules. 97

When the state seeks to introduce the declaration against penal interests of an unavailable third party to inculcate a defendant, through the testimony of an in-court witness, and the defendant claims that such evidence is unreliable, the trial court should conduct a hearing, if there is any dispute concerning the circumstances, to determine whether the criteria for admissibility are actually satisfied. 98 If the court decides to allow such evidence, it should admit only the portion of that statement which is opposed to the declarant's interests since the guarantee of reliability contained in declarations against penal interests exists only to the extent the statement is disserving to the declarant. 99 Finally, when the trial court decides to admit a declaration against penal interest through the testimony of a third party, it should give a proper limiting instruction at the time such testimony is introduced and it should instruct on the use of the evidence during its final jury charge. 1 The evaluation of reliability is a matter entrusted to the trial court, and it is only after a determination of admissibility is made that the jury may assess the credibility of the third party witness. 2

◆ Caution: The Supreme Court has held that the confession of a nontestifying codefendant that directly inculpatates another defendant is not admissible at their joint trial. 3

§ 793 --Statement offered to inculcate defendant [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Codefendant's testimony at his change of plea hearing was statement against his penal interest admissible as tending to exculpate defendant since all his statements—that he delivered package containing LSD for air transportation, intended to take it to concert in Milwaukee and to be involved in conspiracy to distribute it—were against his penal interest, and it was clear from record that codefendant was aware of his rights, had counsel present, and voluntarily made statement to court. United States v Nagib (1995, CA7 Wis) 56 F3d 798.

The trial court did not err by admitting defendant's inculpatory statements in a murder case even if they were the fruit of an attorney's statement to a deputy sheriff that defendant had come into his office to turn himself in for a shooting where defendant consulted the attorney for the sole purpose of his safe surrender to the authorities, the attorney did exactly what defendant requested, and no confidential information was disclosed. Furthermore, it was not error for the trial court to admit defendant's statements even if they disclosed the substance of the attorney's remark to the deputy. State v McIntosh (1994) 336 NC 517, 444 SE2d 438.

By requiring that hearsay implicating a person other than a declarant, which may otherwise be admissible against the declarant under an exception to the hearsay rule, possess particularized guarantees of trustworthiness before it is admissible as evidence against the other person, the court insures that the confrontation clause will never become a mere rule of evidence subject to change or even elimination. State v Cook, 135 NH 655, 610 A2d 800.

b. Self-Serving Declarations [794, 795]

§ 794 Generally; exclusionary rule

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Self-serving declarations—that is, statements favorable to the interest of the declarant—are not admissible in evidence as proof of the facts asserted. 4 A self-serving declaration is a declaration made at some time and place out of court, and does not include testimony which one gives as a witness at the trial. 5 One purpose of the rule excluding self-serving declarations is to prevent the manufacture of evidence. 6 Another reason for denying a defendant the right to introduce in evidence his or her exculpatory declaration is that if the defendant were permitted to do so the defendant would be presenting his or her testimony to the jury without taking the witness stand and running the risk of impeachment on cross-examination. 7 The rule which renders self-serving statements inadmissible is the same in criminal prosecutions as in civil actions. 8

The objection to the admission of this kind of evidence is its hearsay character; 9 the phrase "self-serving" does not describe an independent ground of objection. 10 Moreover, the fact that the declarant has since died does not alter the general exclusionary rule. 11

◆ Observation: A statement may be self-serving in one respect, but contrary to another interest. In such a case, the court must balance the competing interests to determine their predominant nature and ultimately the level of trustworthiness of the statement. 12

As to admissibility of declarations against interest, see § 785.

§ 795 Exceptions to rule

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The rule against the admissibility of self-serving declarations has a number of exceptions. Since the real objection to self-serving statements is their hearsay character, ¹³ and since even hearsay is admissible under exceptions to the general rule of exclusion, ¹⁴ declarations may be admitted in evidence under some circumstances even though self-serving. ¹⁵

Declarations of a party favorable to himself or herself are admissible to contradict evidence previously given. ¹⁶ Declarations made in explanation of stolen property in theft cases are admissible. ¹⁷ An accused in a homicide prosecution may be allowed to show, under a plea of self-defense, that at the time of arming himself or herself, the accused made statements indicating that the purpose was self-protection. ¹⁸ Similarly, an accused in a homicide prosecution may be allowed to prove that he or she made declarations before the shooting that he or she thought the gun was unloaded, but only where the facts support a charge on the legal principle of accident. ¹⁹ In addition, there is authority that where a lay fact finder could have concluded from the state's opening statement that the defendant had confessed to the crime, but the state failed to establish that the defendant had, in fact, confessed, the defendant was entitled to introduce statements made to police officers to show that he had not confessed. ²⁰ There is also authority that in a case where the fact in issue is whether particular act was performed, a declaration indicating a present intention to do the particular act in the immediate future, made in apparent good faith and not for self-serving purposes, is admissible, not as part of the res gestae but is relevant to the fact in issue, to prove that the act was in fact performed. 21

Some cases state that declarations favorable to the party who made them are admissible if made in the presence of the other party. 22 However, there is other authority stating that self-serving declarations are not rendered admissible because they were made in the presence of, or in conversation or correspondence with, the opposing party or his agent. 23

Some jurisdictions hold that a statement, oral or written, made by a party at a time when no motive to misrepresent existed, is not inadmissible as a self-serving declaration. 24

c. Adoptive Admissions [796-810]

(1). Overview [796-798]

§ 796 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Under the Federal Rules of Evidence ²⁵ and the Uniform Rules of Evidence, ²⁶ a statement is "not hearsay" when offered against a party who has manifested an adoption or belief in its truth. Some states also follow the rule that adoptive admissions are an exception to hearsay. ²⁷

Generally, courts consider adoptive admissions as dangerous, to be received with caution. ²⁸ The proponent of the evidence bears the burden of proving that the conduct of the nonoffering party was an adoption of the statement. ²⁹

The adoptive admissions doctrine may be invoked not only against private parties, but against the government as well. ³⁰ However, a statement by the government to the effect that third-party competitors of a corporation named in an antitrust suit are aligned in interest in the case does not demonstrate that the government has adopted every relevant document originating in the files of such competitors, and such files may not be admitted as adoptive admissions. ³¹

§ 797 Manner of adoption

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Generally, adoption or acquiescence may be manifested in any appropriate manner. 32 Adoptive admissions may occur when a party—

- expressly agrees to or concurs in an oral statement made by another. 33
- hears the statement and later on essentially repeats it. 34
- utters an acceptance or builds upon the assertions of another. 35
- replies by way of rebuttal to some specific points raised by another, but ignores further points which he or she has heard the other make. 36
- reads and signs a written statement prepared by another. 37

Although there is some authority that the declarant does not have to be in the physical presence of the defendant, and that the proper focus is on the declarant's ability to hear and understand the statement being made, 38 some state courts have held that where a declarant's confessions are not made in a defendant's presence, any subsequent ratification of the confessions by the defendant does not constitute an adoptive admission. 39 In addition, a request for testing or for other information does not automatically establish an adoption of statements contained within the response. 40

Nonverbal responses may be construed as an adoptive admission. 41 Under certain circumstances, an adoption of a statement by another may be found by a party's silence or failure to respond, 42 or when a party uses information supplied from an outside source. 43 No adoptive admission will be found when a party makes clear the party's disagreement with a statement made in the party's presence. 44

Under limited circumstances, an attorney's opening statements to the jury in a prior criminal trial may qualify as an adoptive admission under the Federal Rule of Evidence 45 or an authorized admission of the client retaining the attorney under the Federal Rules of Evidence 46 and be offered in a subsequent criminal trial. 47 Proof of the formal relationship between the defendant and the defendant's attorney is insufficient, alone, to establish that the prior opening statement is the equivalent of a testimonial by the defendant. 48

§ 797 ----Manner of adoption [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

There was no error in a first- degree murder prosecution where defendant's attorney admitted in his opening statement, without getting defendant's consent, that defendant was guilty of second-degree murder or voluntary manslaughter but defendant consented on the record just prior to closing arguments to his attorney's decision to concede guilt to second-degree murder or voluntary manslaughter. Defendant's consent amounted to ratification of defense counsel's earlier statement and cured any possible error. State v Basden (1994) 339 NC 288, 451 SE2d 238.

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder prosecution by denying defendant's motion to suppress a statement to police and a knife obtained as a result thereof where defendant made no statement until he had been advised of his Miranda rights and had signed a Miranda rights waiver form; he responded affirmatively when he was asked if he understood his rights and wished to waive them; he was not restrained in any way, and the interrogation was conducted in an unlocked office; officers' weapons were never removed from their holsters in the presence of defendant or used to threaten him; defendant did not appear to be sleepy or under the influence of drugs or alcohol during the interrogation; he appeared to be calm, alert, and oriented, did not appear to be frightened, and was able to converse freely with the officers; an officer testified that he engaged defendant in casual conversation to develop rapport, denied threatening defendant or making any promises to induce defendant's inculpatory statement, denied ever telling defendant that defendant needed to make a statement to save his life or avoid the death penalty, and denied telling defendant that he probably saved his life by confessing; another officer testified that he was present when defendant was read his Miranda rights and signed the waiver form; that defendant was oriented, did not smell of alcohol, and did not appear to be physically or mentally impaired; that he had engaged defendant in general conversation to develop rapport with defendant; denied threatening defendant in any way or making any promises to induce defendant's inculpatory statement; denied that defendant had been told to confess or else he would face the death penalty; and denied that defendant was told that he had probably just saved his own life by confessing; another officer testified that when defendant was arrested at his home in the early morning hours of 28 May 1992 before being taken to the police station, he was awake, oriented, and coherent; defendant's speech was not slurred, and he did not appear to be under the influence of alcohol. Upon a review of the totality of the circumstances, it is clear that defendant was not coerced or threatened into confessing his participation in this murder; and the trial court did not err in concluding that defendant freely, knowingly, and intelligently waived his Miranda rights and that defendant's inculpatory statement to the police was given voluntarily. State v Knight (1995) 340 NC 531, 459 SE2d 481.

§ 798 Determination by court or jury

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

When resolving the preliminary questions for an adoptive admission, it is appropriate for the trial judge to conduct a hearing outside the presence of the jury. 49 In determining whether there has been an adoption of a statement, it is appropriate to examine the surrounding circumstances, and the nature of the underlying statement itself. 50 The failure of the trial judge to make express findings as to the foundational facts for adoptive admissions will not render the admission improper, where it appears from the record that the trial judge was concerned with the nature of the statements, and whether the party against whom the statement was offered had the ability to hear and understand. 51 The determination as to whether the accused heard and adopted the statement is a duty shared by the judge and jury. 52

(2). Adoption by Silence [799-804]

(a). In General [799-801]

§ 799 Oral communications

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In many jurisdictions, if a statement is made in the presence of a person in regard to facts affecting his or her rights and the person makes no reply, such silence may be construed as a tacit admission of the facts stated. 53 However, the uncertainty which attends interpreting a person's silence as an implied admission of the statement made has led the courts to consider such evidence as dangerous and to be received with caution, 54 and some jurisdictions do not allow tacit admissions. 55

Generally, a party's mere listening presence is not enough. 56 In admitting such evidence, it must be established that: (1) the party heard the statement; 57 (2) the matter asserted was within the party's knowledge, 58 or understanding, 59 (3) the individual was at liberty to deny the statement or reply to it; 60 and (4) the statement was of such a nature, 61 made under such circumstances, 62 and by such persons, 63 as naturally to call for a reply.

Depending on the circumstances, silence in the face of an accusation may be found to constitute, 64 or not to constitute 65 an admission. Whether the circumstances surrounding the making of the statement were such as to naturally call for a denial is a preliminary question for the trial court, to be determined in view of all the evidence in the case. 66 The trial court's decision, of course, does not determine finally whether or not the person's silence was an admission of the truth of the statement, but only whether a sufficient prima facie showing has been made to warrant the jury considering it in the light of all the circumstances. 67 Some courts state that, where the evidence leaves the matter in doubt, it is the jury's province to determine whether the remarks were heard and understood and to draw inferences from the person's silence. 68

The doctrine of assent by silence does not ordinarily apply to statements made in the course of judicial proceedings, 69 because it is not the right or duty of a party to interrupt the order of proceedings by denials or contradictions, and silence cannot, therefore, under such circumstances, be deemed an admission. 70

§ 800 --Particular circumstances

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The doctrine of assenting silence or tacit admission has been recognized with respect to the silence of a party to civil litigation after a statement has been made in his or her presence regarding the circumstances of an accident involved in such litigation. 71 As in the case of tacit admissions generally, a basic prerequisite to the admissibility of another's statement concerning an accident as against a party who failed to deny or contradict it is the requirement that it was actually heard and understood by such party, 72 and that it was made under such circumstances as to naturally call for a reply. 73

In addition, when a statement is made in the party's listening presence, the silence of a party has been found to constitute an admission when——a coconspirator states to other conspirators that the party will be taking over the unlawful enterprise. 74

—a codefendant brags of committing a murder and describes the events leading up to the death. 75

—third parties sit in the defendant's home and plan an arson. 76

§ 801 Written communications

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

As with verbal statements, 77 there must be an affirmative showing that a party's silence or nonresponse to a written document constitutes an adoption of the document. 78 If a written statement is handed to a party and read by the party in the presence of others, the party's failure to deny assertions contained in it, when under the circumstances it would be natural for the party to deny them if he or she did not acquiesce, may be received as an admission. 79

Proof that a document was received is insufficient, alone, to establish an adoption of the information contained in it. 80 Although a contrary position has been upheld, 81 mere possession of a written document does not necessarily constitute an adoption of the contents. 82 The failure to respond to a letter does not indicate an adoption unless it is reasonable under the circumstances for the sender to expect the recipient to respond and to correct erroneous assertions. 83 Consequently, some jurisdictions state that, where two parties have carried on correspondence in reference to a particular subject and one of the parties has written a letter to the other making statements concerning a subject, of which the other party has knowledge, and which he or she would naturally deny if not true, and the party fails to answer such letter, the omission is evidence tending to show that the statements in the letter are true. 84 However, the failure to reply to statements made in a letter which is not part of a mutual correspondence is not considered an implied admission of the truth of statements made. 85 Moreover, a self-serving declaration in an unanswered letter generally is not treated as admitted merely because the letter was not answered. 86 At least this is so where the dispute is whether a contract was made between the parties, and an attempt is made to fix an admission by the adversary upon a failure to answer such a claim in a letter. 87

(b). Incriminating Accusations [802-804]

§ 802 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Although some authority exists to the contrary, 88 as a general rule, when a statement tending to incriminate one accused of committing a crime is made in his or her presence and such statement is not denied, contradicted, or objected to by such person, both the statement and the fact of the failure to deny it are admissible in a criminal prosecution against the person, as evidence of acquiescence to its truth, 89 that is, as a tacit admission of the facts stated 90 or as indicative of a consciousness of guilt, 91 provided that the circumstances do not lend themselves to an inference that the accused was relying on the right to silence guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment. 92 The theory underlying this rule is that the natural reaction of an innocent person to an untrue accusation is to enter a prompt denial. 93 Consequently, some courts provide that the rule that an admission is implied from the failure of an accused to deny incriminating statements made in his or her presence and hearing does not apply to written statements 94 since a person would be likely to ignore such a communication if false in its statements of fact or unsound in its advice, as unworthy of serious consideration. 95 The general rule also does not apply to admissions made in postarrest situations. 96

The uncertainty which attends interpreting an accused's silence as an implied admission of the statement made, or as exhibiting a consciousness of guilt, has led courts to consider such evidence as dangerous and to be received with caution. 97 Recognizing that at its best, the doctrine of assenting silence brings about the weakest assumption known to the law, the courts generally have imposed conditions upon the introduction of evidence that an alleged admission by silence has occurred. 98 Accordingly, one seeking to introduce evidence that an alleged admission by silence has occurred has been required to prove that:

- (1) the statement was extrajudicial; 99
- (2) it was incriminatory or accusative in import; 1
- (3) it was one to which an innocent person would in the situation and surrounding circumstances naturally respond; 2
- (4) it was uttered in the presence and hearing of the accused, 3 or the accused heard it; 4
- (5) the accused was capable of understanding the incriminatory meaning of the statement; 5
- (6) the accused had sufficient knowledge to reply to the statement; 6
- (7) the accused had an opportunity to reply; 7 and
- (8) he or she was at liberty to deny it or reply to it. 8

For the adoptive admission exception to apply, however, a direct accusation in so many words is not essential. 9

Under the adoptive admission exception to the rule against hearsay, a declarant's accusatory or incriminating statements are not admitted to prove the truth of matters asserted. 10 Such statements are admissible because they lay the foundation to show that the defendant acquiesced or admitted to the statement. 11 An adoptive admission avoids the confrontation problem because the words of the hearsay become the words of the defendant. 12

Failure to object or deny a co-defendant's statements at the time they were made is especially probative of the defendant's acquiescence if they are made in the presence of a third party who was not an accomplice in the crime. 13

◆ Observation: Although it is clear that there is no ground for invoking the doctrine of tacit admissions where an incriminatory statement is made in the presence of the accused and he or she denies it, 14 an evasive answer is another matter. An evasive answer, or one unresponsive to the statement made to the accused, may be tantamount to absolute silence, and both the statement and the unresponsive answer are admissible under the rule as to tacit admissions. 15

§ 802 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]Case authorities:

Response of defendant charged with structuring currency transactions to avoid reporting requirements, that he would have to research his records before responding to request to explain checks in question, was not admission by silence, since questioning by agent of state attorney general's office did not constitute accusation that defendant himself had committed crime of structuring to which he could have acquiesced. United States v Hove (1995, CA9 Cal) 52 F3d 233, 95 CDOS 2475.

In prosecution for murder, robbery, and armed criminal action, testimony of witness that husband told her in presence of defendant that he had accidentally shot victim and hoped she did not die was properly admitted under tacit admission rule where defendant was silent after husband made statement, then husband told defendant to unload gun, which defendant pulled from under shirt and unloaded, then divided approximately $300 with husband. State v Gibbs (1994, Mo App) 875 SW2d 159.

The trial court in a capital resentencing hearing erred by permitting the State to elicit testimony from an SBI agent that, during interrogation after defendant had been advised of his Miranda rights and had been informed that he was under arrest, defendant had remained silent when faced with the agent's accusation that he murdered the victim, since this testimony amounted to an impermissible reference to defendant's exercise of his right to silence. The trial court also erred by permitting the State to cross-examine defendant about his silence in the face of the SBI agent's accusation of murder since this questioning allowed the jury to infer guilt and lack of remorse through defendant's exercise of his constitutional right to silence. State v Quick (1994) 337 NC 359, 446 SE2d 535.

§ 803 Where accused is under arrest or in custody

View Entire Section

Go to Supplement

No admission by silence may be inferred if a statement is made after the accused has been placed under arrest, after the police have read the accused Miranda rights, or after the accused has been so significantly deprived of his or her freedom that the accused is, in effect, in police custody. 16 When the accused stands mute or claims the privilege against self-incrimination while undergoing custodial interrogation, the Constitution precludes the use at trial of his or her silence in the face of oral accusations by law enforcement officers. 17 Moreover, there is authority that a codefendant and his or her attorney may not comment upon an accused's post-arrest silence to any greater extent than the prosecutor would be permitted to do. 18 Some courts state that the use of such evidence for impeachment purposes cannot be justified absent unusual circumstances, since the potential for prejudice in evidence of a defendant's post-arrest silence outweighs its marginal probative worth. 19 However, some courts state that the prosecutor may impeach a defendant with pre-arrest silence, provided the silence precedes Miranda warnings, even though the defendant remains silent on the advice of counsel, 20 and some courts hold that, even in post-arrest cases, the prosecutor must establish that Miranda warnings were not given prior to silence relied upon for impeachment purposes. 21 Nevertheless, other courts hold that an admission by the silence of the accused in failing to answer an accusation by police officers while in custody is inadmissible where the accused was not advised of his or her constitutional rights. 22

There is authority that it is reversible error to admit evidence of a defendant's silence at the time of his or her arrest²³ and reversal may be without consideration of the doctrine of harmless error despite the introduction into evidence after that testimony of an oral inculpatory statement subsequently made by defendant.²⁴ The reasons for this are that an accused ought not be penalized for exercising his or her constitutional rights.²⁵ In addition, statements of a third party made in the presence of defendant while he or she is in custody or under arrest, which are not denied, are inadmissible.²⁶

Despite the general rule prohibiting admission of post-arrest silence, if a defendant does not invoke his or her right to remain silent, but speaks on certain matters, the fact that the defendant omits to mention other relevant matters may be admissible.²⁷

In a federal robbery prosecution in which the defendant, who was convicted, had testified to explain how he had obtained cash found in his possession when arrested, the trial court committed prejudicial error in permitting cross-examination of the defendant as to his silence during police interrogation when asked where he got the money, and the defendant is thus entitled to a new trial, where: (1) just prior to the question at police interrogation, the defendant had been informed of his right to remain silent and the fact that anything he said could be used against him, (2) the defendant had repeatedly asserted his innocence at the trial, (3) the defendant was being questioned in a secretive forum, (4) the defendant had been the subject of eyewitness identification and had been arrested on suspicion of having committed the offense, thus being a "potential defendant," and (5) the defendant had no reason to think that any explanation he might make to the police would hasten his release, in view of the seemingly strong evidence against him, his prior contacts with the police, and his participation in a narcotics rehabilitation program; under these circumstances, the defendant's failure to offer an explanation during the custodial interrogation can as easily be taken to indicate reliance on the right to remain silent as to support an inference that the explanatory testimony was a later fabrication, and thus the probative value of the defendant's pre-trial silence is outweighed by the prejudicial impact of admitting it into evidence. United States v Hale, 422 US 171, 45 L Ed 2d 99, 95 S Ct 2133.

Where the accused initially waives his right to remain silent and agrees to questioning, if the accused subsequently refuses to answer further questions, the prosecution may note the refusal because it now constitutes part of an otherwise admissible conversation between the police and the accused. United States v Harris (CA8 Mo) 956 F2d 177, reh, en banc, den (CA8) 1992 US App LEXIS 4739 and cert den (US) 121 L Ed 2d 48, 113 S Ct 85.

§ 804 Determination by court or jury

In regard to an admission by the failure of an accused person to reply to an oral incriminatory statement, there is a difference of opinion among the courts as to whether the trial court should preliminarily determine the admissibility of such evidence or whether the jury should determine whether the prerequisites for admissibility exist. In some courts it has been held that it is for the jury to determine whether the accused heard and understood the statements made, 29 and it is also generally held that it is for the jury to determine whether, under all the circumstances shown, the statements called for a disclaimer, whether the accused did reply to them, and whether, if he or she did not reply to them, such failure showed criminal intent or a consciousness of guilt. 30

On the other hand, there are courts which, with regard to the determination of the admissibility of admissions by reason of silent acquiescence, consider it to be the better procedure for the court, in the absence of the jury, to hear evidence pro and con bearing upon the competency of such evidence. 31 It has been held that the trial court should determine in the first instance whether the accused heard and understood the statement, 32 whether the accusation was made under such circumstances as to call for a reply, and whether the accused's conduct or response was such as to give rise to an inference of acquiescence or guilty consciousness. 33 In its preliminary determination, the court should consider whether any other explanation is equally consistent with silence. 34

§ 804 ----Determination by court or jury [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court in a capital resentencing hearing erred by permitting the State to elicit testimony from an SBI agent that, during interrogation after defendant had been advised of his Miranda rights and had been informed that he was under arrest, defendant had remained silent when faced with the agent's accusation that he murdered the victim, since this testimony amounted to an impermissible reference to defendant's exercise of his right to silence. The trial court also erred by permitting the State to cross-examine defendant about his silence in the face of the SBI agent's accusation of murder since this questioning allowed the jury to infer guilt and lack of remorse through defendant's exercise of his constitutional right to silence. State v Quick (1994) 337 NC 359, 446 SE2d 535.

Although it is ordinarily for the jury to decide, in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances, whether the accused actually heard and understood the incriminating statement, the question whether the circumstances of the statement and its making were such as to serve as the inciting cause calling for a reply by the accused in the situation is a preliminary one for the court to decide. Arpan v United States (CA8 SD) 260 F2d 649.

(3). Adoption by Nonverbal Conduct [805-810]

§ 805 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The acts and conduct of a party may be as expressive as spoken or written statements, and they may, in some instances, be proved under the principles applicable to admissions. 35 An adoptive admission may be implied from conduct of a party which manifests circumstantially the party's assent to the truth of a statement made by another person. 36 For party's conduct to be admissible as an admission, however, there must be a rational nexus between the conduct and what the conduct purportedly admits. 37 In criminal cases, an admission on the basis of a defendant's conduct may be allowed in evidence if the conduct tends in some way to connect the defendant to the crime charged. 38 Consciousness of guilt may be inferred from the intent of or an attempt by the accused to conceal, alter, or remove evidence of the crime. 39

Many types of acts or conduct may be received in evidence as admissions by a party, for example: the use of a document prepared by another; 40 the transfer or disposal of property after the occurrence of an accident or some other event that might render the transferor liable in damages; 41 the assumption of a false name following an accident; 42 refusal to submit to an examination; 43 issuance by a manufacturer of a recall letter concerning its product; 44 conformity of one's business, social, or other behavior to a certain restricted course of conduct over a period of time as a means of establishing an agreement; 45 departure from the jurisdiction by one on whom service of summons may have been expected, though evidence of such flight is merely corroborative in nature and is admissible only where there is other proof of wrongdoing on the defendant's part; 46 and attempts to influence witnesses. 47 A defendant's attempt to hide his or her identity may be admissible as bearing on the consciousness of guilt. 48 In addition, a person's nonverbal conduct in response to an accusation may constitute an admission. 49

Nevertheless, a defendant's decision to consult an attorney is not probative in the least of guilt or innocence, and a prosecutor may not imply that only guilty people contact their attorneys. 50 Moreover, the failure of a consumer to dispute the validity of a debt under certain sections of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act 51 may not be construed by a court as an admission of liability by the consumer. 52

§ 806 Adoption by use

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A party's use of a document supplied by another may be construed as representing the party's intended assertion of the truth of the information in it, and constitute an adoptive admission under the Federal Rules of Evidence. 53 Adoption by use comes into play in situations where a party forwards the written document to another in response to a request or perceived need for the information contained in the document. 54 Informal use of a document will not necessarily constitute an adoption of the contents, since individuals and businesses regularly assimilate and utilize information received from a variety of outside sources, and it is unrealistic to presume that each such use constitutes an admission. 55

Proof of an intentional adoption by use may require the offering party to demonstrate some significant and direct reliance upon the specific information. 56 However, allegations that the information from the outside source is not trustworthy because it is not current is an inappropriate basis for an objection to an adoptive admission. 57

An adoption of the contents of a document prepared by another has been found in instances where the party had copies of the document made and then distributed to entities with whom the party does business, 58 or cross-referred to certain documents 59 as an answer to interrogatories. 60 A written statement may constitute an adoptive admission, when a party obtains the affidavit of another and offers it in a judicial proceeding in support of a request for a warrant, 61 or files a petition in bankruptcy, even though the statements therein are those of the bankrupt's attorney. 62 A corporation's submission of the minutes of another corporation's board meeting in an arbitration proceeding involving those two corporations was not binding on the submitting party in separate litigation with a third party, where the minutes were submitted as proof of a motive and not as an adoption of the factual assertions contained therein. 63

§ 807 Refusal to submit to examination

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The refusal of one involved in an accident to submit to a physical examination may be admissible in evidence as an admission relating to his or her injuries. 64 Similarly, the refusal of the accused in a criminal case to submit to a scientific test to determine the amount of alcohol in his or her system, where such question is otherwise relevant, 65 has been held admissible, in some cases, as an admission of guilt. 66

§ 808 Transfer or disposal of property

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Generally, courts have recognized the admissibility of evidence that a person, after an accident, or the occurrence of some other event which might render such person liable, disposed of his or her property, since such evidence tends to show a consciousness of liability⁶⁷ and a purpose to evade satisfaction of liability.⁶⁸ However, evidence of such a transfer of property does not establish negligence as a matter of law.⁶⁹

§ 809 Attempt to influence witnesses

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A party's attempt to improperly, even illegally, influence a witness is thought to be an admission by conduct. 70 It may be shown that an accused attempted to influence, bribe, or cause the absence of a witness at trial. 71 In addition, evidence that a party to the respective action offered money to the witness in order to induce the witness to give testimony favorable to such party may be admissible. 72

In a criminal case, evidence of an attempt by a third person to suppress testimony is relevant and may be introduced into evidence on the issue of the defendant's guilt where it is established that the attempt was made with the authorization of the accused. 73 Consequently, if a person other than the accused threatens a witness to induce false testimony, then statements, questions, and testimony concerning such threats are clearly proper and admissible to establish the accused's guilt on the original charge and to show consciousness of guilt if it can be shown that the threats were made at the request of the accused or with his or her knowledge or consent. 74 Circumstantial evidence may be sufficient to show that a criminal defendant authorized the conduct of a third person in attempting to influence a prosecution witness or suppress testimony, making evidence of such an attempt admissible against the defendant. 75 However, absent additional evidence connecting the defendant with the attempt by a third person to influence a witness not to testify, or to testify falsely, the mere fact that the defendant and that person are related is not adequate proof of the authorization needed to make the attempt admissible in evidence on the issue of the defendant's guilt. 76 Similarly, an unsworn, out-of-court declaration attributable to a coconspirator, showing an attempt by the coconspirator in the defendant's absence to influence a witness' testimony, is not admissible in evidence on the issue of the defendant's own guilt where it was made not in furtherance of the conspiracy charged, but in furtherance of an alleged implied conspiracy aimed at preventing detection and punishment. 77

Even where the state presents evidence that threats were made with the defendant's knowledge, consent, or authorization, the trial court must consider whether the probative value of the evidence outweighs its prejudicial effect. 78

Evidence of a physical movement such as nodding or other head movement may be admitted ⁷⁹ under the adoptive admission exception to the hearsay rule, ⁸⁰ although there is authority to the contrary. ⁸¹ Similarly, some courts have admitted evidence of grinning and shrugging, ⁸² while others have held evidence of shrugging inadmissible. ⁸³ Courts have held that it could be shown that a defendant turned away from his or her accuser, ⁸⁴ or that a defendant pointed to and identified certain incriminating evidence. ⁸⁵ Other types of physical reactions have also been found admissible, for instance, smiling, ⁸⁶ laughing, ⁸⁷ snickering, ⁸⁸ crying, ⁸⁹ or stammering and looking surprised. ⁹⁰ Giving a codefendant a long look indicating that he or she should remain silent has also been held admissible. ⁹¹

d. Authorized Admissions [811, 812]

§ 811 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The Federal Rules of Evidence define as "not hearsay" a statement offered against a party and made by a person whom the party has authorized to speak on that party's behalf regarding the subject. 92 The Uniform Rules of Evidence provide that a statement is "not hearsay" if offered against a party and is a statement by an individual authorized by the party to make a statement concerning the subject. 93 A statement made by a person, authorized by a party to make a statement concerning the subject, is considered an admission by that party. 94 The existence and limits of such authority should be determined in accordance with the substantive law of agency. 95 Often such "speaking authority" may be implied from the nature of the relationship and the task which the declarant is to perform, as in the case of attorneys, 96 interpreters, 97 and certain employees with managerial or supervisory responsibilities. 98 Otherwise speaking, authority must be proven by express grant or special circumstances. 99

Proof that an individual is an agent or employee of a party, without proof as to the extent of that individual's authority to speak on the issue in question, is inadequate to support the admission of the declarant's statement against the party-opponent. 1 A statement offered as an authorized admission under the Federal Rules cannot itself establish the existence or scope of the requisite speaking authority. 2 Proof of an authorization to speak on behalf of a party may be derived from circumstantial evidence. 3 Thus, evidence that the declarant is authorized to speak may be derived from a party's conscious reliance on an interpreter's translation abilities during a custodial interrogation, 4 or when a particular employee is assigned by the employer or the employer's representative to respond to a letter mailed to the employer by someone not associated with the company. 5

The declarant's mere repetition of assertions by others concerning the matter on which the declarant is authorized to speak may not qualify as an authorized admission of a party-opponent when the repetition is not an affirmative assertion by the declarant. 6 For assertions by outside sources which are repeated by a declarant to qualify as an authorized admission by a party, it has been noted that it should appear that there was some independent evaluation or assessment of those statements before they were reasserted by the declarant with authorization to speak for the party-opponent. 7 The Federal Rule of Evidence governing authorized admissions also encompasses statements made by the authorized declarant to the party against whom the statement is offered, as long as the statement relates to matters within the scope of the declarant's speaking authority. 8 In addition, a translation by an interpreter may qualify as an authorized admission. 9

§ 812 Attorneys

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Statements by a party's attorney may be admissible against the party if the statements are within the scope of representation, 10 that is, if the attorney has "speaking authority" as implied by the attorney-client relationship. 11 The client is not bound by casual statements of his or her attorney out of court. 12

An attorney of record may have the authority to admit a fact in the course of a trial for the purpose of obviating the need to prove it even though the fact admitted is against a defendant's interest, 13 and pleadings prepared and filed by counsel hired by a party are sometimes regarded, prima facie, as being authorized by the party. 14

Although pleadings composed by a party's attorney for a prior case may serve as evidentiary admissions in a subsequent proceeding where the attorney is authorized to act and speak on the party's behalf, 15 remarks contained in an appellate brief filed in unrelated litigation do not constitute party-admissions, absent highly unusual circumstances. 16 Under limited circumstances, counsel's opening statements in a prior criminal trial may qualify as an authorized admission of the client retaining the attorney and be offered in a subsequent criminal trial. 17

Before a prior opening statement may be admitted in a subsequent criminal trial under the Federal Rule governing authorized admissions, 18 the court, in a hearing held outside the presence of the jury, must determine that the statement involved an assertion of fact clearly inconsistent with similar assertions in the subsequent trial and not requiring the trier of fact to explore events at the prior trial, and that the statement was the equivalent of a testimonial statement by the defendant. 19 Further, some participatory role of the defendant in connection with the counsel's assertion in the opening argument must be evident either directly or inferentially. 20 In ruling on the admissibility of the opening statement, the court should determine by a preponderance of the evidence that the inference the prosecution seeks to draw from the inconsistency is fair, and where the evidence is equal or the preponderance favors an innocent explanation for the inconsistency, the prior opening statement should be excluded. 21 Speculation of counsel or advocacy regarding the credibility of witnesses contained in a prior opening statement is inadmissible. 22 Proof of the formal relationship between the defendant and the defendant's attorney is insufficient, alone, to establish that the prior opening statement is the equivalent of a testimonial by the defendant. 23

◆ Comment: Although the Federal Rule of Evidence governing authorized admissions does not expressly state that opening statements by defense counsel in a prior criminal trial may be admitted only under limited circumstances, it has been held that the admission of opening statements to a jury in prior trial, while not barred per se, should be circumscribed due to other policy considerations, at least in criminal proceedings. Among the policy considerations courts have noted are the fact that free admission of prior opening statements may require the exploration of marginal matters, free use of jury argument may deter attorneys from vigorous advocacy, explanation of the inconsistency may infringe on other rights of the defendant, and free use of jury argument may lead to the disqualification of the attorney chosen by the defendant. 24

An admission made by a party to an action is admissible against such party. 25 Moreover, if a party has appointed another to speak or act for him or her, the statements made by the person appointed, within the scope of such person's authority to so speak or act, are admissible against the party. 26 However, the statement of a third person is generally objectionable as hearsay where offered as proof of the fact asserted, unless it is within an exception to the rule excluding hearsay. 27 Furthermore, such a statement is not binding upon, or admissible against, a party as original evidence in the nature of an admission inconsistent with his or her assertion of a cause of action or defense, 28 unless it is made to appear that the party authorized the declarant to speak, 29 or adopted the statement sought to be introduced, 30 or that there is a privity of estate between the declarant and the party. 31 It is also recognized that the statements of one person may be rendered admissible against another by virtue of the existence between them of a common interest, 32 and this common interest exists, as a rule, between persons who act jointly or have joint rights or interests, 33 but not necessarily merely because there is a co-ownership of property, such as exists between tenants in common. 34

Generally, an admission by a party to the record is not evidence against others who may happen incidentally to be joined as parties to the suit. 40 Similarly, the declarations or admissions of nominal parties to a proceeding are not admissible against the real party, in the absence of privity of interest or special circumstances. 41 However, the declarations or admissions of the real party in interest are admissible against the nominal party, that is, the one representing the real party's interest. 42

§ 815 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Generally, all statements and declarations made by an agent within the scope of his or her employment and with the actual or apparent authority of the principal are binding upon the principal, and the principal is responsible for them. 43 This principle of the law of agency, though substantive in nature, operates in the law of evidence, in many instances, to render a statement made by one person admissible in evidence as an admission binding upon another person who is a party to an action. Whatever is said by an agent to a third person, during the course of the agent's duties and within the scope of the agent's authority, relative to business contemplated by the agency in which the agent is then engaged is in legal intendment said by the principal and is admissible in evidence against such principal. 44 Hence, an employee's admission against his or her own interest as to his or her negligence can result indirectly in liability being imposed upon the employer, if the employee is a party defendant. 45 The admission is not evidence that the employer was negligent, but it is evidence that the employee was negligent, and the employer may become liable under respondeat superior where that doctrine properly applies. 46

In addition, the hearsay bar is removed only if——the declarant is a servant or agent of the party against whom the statement is offered. 47

—the statement is made during the course of an employment or agency relationship, and not before the declarant entered into the relationship, 48 or after the termination of the relationship. 49

—the statement concerns matters within the scope of the declarant's agency or employment. 50

It has been held that essentially any statements made by a corporation's employees while in the employ of that corporation, concerning any aspect of the employees' involvement with the subject matter of the litigation, qualify for admission. 51

An agent or employee's mere repetition of assertions by others may not, in order to constitute admissions that may be offered against a litigating party, be enough to qualify those statements as affirmative assertions by the agent or employee. 52 It should appear that there was some independent evaluation or assessment of the information asserted by the outside source before it was asserted by the agent or employee. 53

The inability to specifically identify the sources from which a business document is compiled may prevent a determination that the document constitutes a party-admission of the principal or employer; 54 however, the document may be admissible where it may be reasonably inferred from the contents of the document that it was compiled by corporate agents and that the matters discussed were within the scope of their agency. 55

Where the declarant is an "agent" of the accused, but is not alleged or shown to be a party to any conspiracy, the government, in a criminal prosecution, may resort to the Federal Rule of Evidence pertaining to agency and employment, in lieu of the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule. 56

Where an employee testified that she was employed in the area where one party was installing a door and she made a statement to a worker, who was injured by a box on the conveyor system, that was, in essence, an apology in case she had been the one who pushed the box down the conveyor, the statement of the employee was admissible and relevant on the issues of the employer's knowledge of the other party's accident and as a statement of an agent of a party opponent that had a tendency to substantiate the other party's account of the accident. Ashby v First Data Resources, Inc., 242 Neb 529, 497 NW2d 330.

Restatement, Agency 2d § 286, provides that in an action between the principal and a third person, statements of an agent to the third person are admissible in evidence against the principal to prove the truth of the facts asserted in them as though made by the principal, if the agent was authorized to make the statement or was authorized to make, on the principal's behalf, any statements concerning the subject matter.

§ 816 Preliminary proof of agency

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The existence of an agency must be established before the declarations of an agent may be proved against the principal, 57 except in a case where the statement may be admissible under general rules of evidence without reference to the status of the declarant as an agent. 58 The existence of an agency relationship under the Federal Rule of Evidence governing statements by agents or employees 59 is to be determined in accordance with the substantive law of agency. 60 While there must be substantial evidence of the existence of an agency or employment relationship, it has been held that proof by a preponderance of the evidence is not required. 61 The alleged insanity of an agent is irrelevant to consideration of the hearsay objection once the agency relationship has been established. 62

Circumstantial evidence may be used to show the existence 63 and the scope 64 of the agency or employment relationship. For instance, when an organization receives an inquiry from a party outside the organization, the organization's referral of that inquiry to a particular employee has been found sufficient to show that the matter was within the scope of employment of that employee. 65 However, a statement offered under the rule of evidence governing statements arising out of agency or employment cannot itself establish the existence or scope of agency necessary for admission of the statement. 66 It is a well-established rule that the statements of an agent, other than the agent's testimony in the case in which the issue arises, are not admissible against the principal to prove the agency or the scope or extent thereof, and that an agent's authority to bind the principal may not be shown by evidence of the agent's extrajudicial statements. 67

It may be necessary to establish that the declarant is an agent, as opposed to an independent contractor. 68

§ 817 Scope of agency, employment, or authority

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

While some state courts still hold that agents must be acting within the scope of their authority in order for their statements to be attributable to the principal, 69 and that the admissibility of an agent's statements is predicated on a showing that the agent was authorized, expressly or impliedly, to make a statement or statements concerning the subject matter to which the statement pertains, 70 the Federal Rules of Evidence 71 and the Uniform Rules of Evidence 72 define as "not hearsay" certain statements offered against a party, and made by a party's agent or servant concerning a matter within the scope of the agency or employment made during the existence of the relationship. Some states have adopted similar rules. 73 Agents are rarely given specific authority to make damaging statements, but the present trend is to admit the statement if it concerns matters within the scope of the agent's employment. 74 Thus, the declarant need not be authorized to speak as is required under the rule governing authorized admissions generally, 75 nor must the declarant have personal knowledge of the operative events. 76

◆ Caution: Proof that an individual is an agent or employee of a party, 77 without proof as to the extent that the statement is within the scope of the individual's employment, is inadequate to qualify a statement as a party-admission. 78

States which require authority to make a statement sometimes do not make a distinction as to whether the statement was one of fact or opinion as long as it was within the scope of the agent's authority. 79

§ 818 Statements showing knowledge of fact or condition

Statements made by an agent prior to an injury may be admitted in evidence in an action for such injury for the purpose of showing the knowledge of the agent, and through the agent, of the principal, of the fact or condition revealed by such statements, where they were made during the course and within the scope of the agent's employment. 80 And some courts hold that testimony concerning extrajudicial statements of an agent made shortly after an accident are admissible in evidence in an action for personal injuries, at least for the limited purpose of showing the knowledge of the agent, and through the agent, of the principal, of facts or conditions in instances where such knowledge is a material part of the case. 81

§ 819 Government agents and employees

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Providing the prerequisites for admission under the rule admitting statements of agents and employees as admissions of a party-opponent are met, 82 statements of government agents or employees may be introduced as substantive evidence in civil actions as party-admissions of the United States government, 83 including statements by government attorneys. 84 Although it is not necessarily the case that every publication of every branch of the government of the United States can be treated as a party admission under the rule governing admissions by agents or servants, in certain cases, government manuals may be introduced. 85 Despite the general rule of admissibility in such cases, however, the Freedom of Information Act 86 protects the common-law evidentiary privilege that attaches to predecisional, deliberative communications within agency. 87 This privilege protects government agencies from exposure of advice and ideas which are expressed prior to the time the agency's decision is made and thereby promotes efficiency and frankness of agency deliberative process. 88

Statements by government agents and employees are not admissible, substantively, against the government in criminal prosecutions. 89 Government agents and employees stand in a different posture in criminal proceedings, since they stand in the same relationship to the government and the criminal defendant, as persons who have no connection to the success or development of the criminal prosecution. 90

◆ Comment: Some doubt has been expressed as to whether the drafters of the Federal Rules of Evidence intended to exclude statements of government agents and employees from the operation of the Federal Rule governing statements by agents and employees in criminal cases; however, it has been suggested that support for excluding such statements may be found in the exclusion of public records and reports of law enforcement personnel from the hearsay exception set forth in another Federal Rule of Evidence, 91 which provides that certain records of public offices and agencies are excluded from the rule barring hearsay and may be admitted as evidence even when the declarant is available as a witness. 92

In a criminal prosecution, government employees are not servants of a party opponent for purposes of the admissions exception under FRE, Rule 801(d)(2)(D), because government agents are supposedly disinterested in the outcome of a trial, so that their statements seem less the product of the adversary process, hence less appropriately described as admissions of a party. United States v Kampiles (CA7 Ind) 609 F2d 1233, 5 Fed Rules Evid Serv 922, cert den 446 US 954, 64 L Ed 2d 812, 100 S Ct 2923 and (criticized on other grounds by Bennett v Grand Prairie (CA5 Tex) 883 F2d 400) and (criticized on other grounds by United States v A & S Council Oil Co. (CA4 NC) 947 F2d 1128, 34 Fed Rules Evid Serv 380).

§ 820 Attorneys

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Statements made by an attorney concerning a matter within the scope of the attorney's representation of the client may be admitted against the client as substantive evidence under the rule of evidence admitting statements by agents and employees as admissions of a party-opponent. 93 Some states also provide that a statement made by an attorney concerning a matter within his or her employment may be admissible against the party retaining the attorney. 94 An attorney is the client's agent for the management of legal affairs, and, consequently, an attorney's factual statements made on a client's behalf in a letter, during pretrial proceedings, or at the trial itself have been found to be admissions. 95 Although there is some authority to the contrary, 96 there is authority that pleadings composed by an attorney in a prior case may be used as evidentiary admissions against the client, 97 as well as a statement to an IRS auditor regarding the client's additional income which the client allegedly thought was not reportable. 98 Nevertheless, there is authority that the unique nature of the attorney-client relationship demands that a trial court exercise caution in admitting statements that are a product of this relationship. 99 Absent highly unusual circumstances, remarks contained in appellate briefs filed in different cases do not constitute party-admissions. 1 Similarly, out-of-court statements made by an attorney during informal discussions of the client's business or status have been found inadmissible under the Federal Rule of Evidence governing statements by agents and employees. 2

Although, in civil cases, statements by government attorneys are admissible as a party-admission of the government, statements by prosecuting attorneys in criminal cases do not constitute party-admissions of the government, since the prosecution is considered personally disinterested in the outcome of the criminal proceeding. 3

◆ Caution: Admissions of criminal liability by a party's attorney might not be admissible against the client. 4 However, under limited circumstances, an attorney's opening statement in a prior criminal trial is admissible in a subsequent criminal trial against the client as an authorized admission 5 and as an adoptive admission. 6

The attorney-client privilege will protect assertions of the client when the statements are made with the intent that the information remain confidential; however, the privilege may be considered waived for information given with the intent to be voiced on the client's behalf. 7

§ 821 Interpreters

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Generally, under the rule of evidence admitting statements by agents and employees as admissions of a party-opponent, an interpreter is viewed as an agent of the party for whom they interpret, thus the translation may be considered a party-admission that qualifies as "not hearsay." 8 A party's conscious reliance on an interpreter's translation may be construed as an authorization to speak on behalf of the party. 9

Unless there are circumstances that would negate a presumption of agency, interpreters will be considered agents if they have sufficient capacity to act as interpreters, and there is no apparent motive to misrepresent what is said. 10 Circumstances which may negate an inference of agency between the interpreter and the party against whom the translation is offered include instances where the interpreter seeks to shift suspicion to the accused and away from the interpreter or where the interpreter is shown to be incompetent. 11 The competency of an interpreter may be demonstrated through the interpreter's trial testimony that the interpreter had no trouble communicating with the party and that the party had no apparent problem understanding the interpreter. 12 The failure of an interpreter to take notes and to remember the specific questions or answers translated has been found not crucial to the admission of the translation of a defendant's responses, where the substance of the translation was related at trial by a law enforcement officer, who took simultaneous notes while the translation of questions and answers occurred. 13

That the interpreter is an employee of the government does not preclude the interpreter from being considered an agent of a criminal defendant for purposes of admitting the translation, 14 even when the party is unaware that the interpreter is a law enforcement agent. 15

§ 822 Corporate officers and agents

View Entire Section

Generally, the rules relative to the admissibility of statements of agents¹⁶ apply to statements by corporate officers or agents.¹⁷ The admissions and representations of the officers or agents of a corporation, made during the transaction of the business entrusted to them or within the actual or apparent scope of their authority, may be admissible in evidence against the corporation.¹⁸ Where there is a requirement that the employee be acting within the scope of his or her authority¹⁹ in order to render admissions of corporate officers or agents admissible against the corporation, they must have been made while such officers or agents were acting for the corporation and within the scope or apparent scope of their authority, and the declarations or admissions must be made in their official capacity, and not in their capacity as individuals.²⁰

Generally, declarations of employees are admissible regardless of whether the declarations are made by a management-level or low-level employee, providing the declaration is within the scope of employment. 21 However, some courts requiring that the employee be acting within the scope of his or her authority state that in order to be within the scope of authority, the employee usually must have some executive capacity. 22

Although, traditionally, a report from an agent to a principal, intended to be confidential, was not an admission, some courts state that intercorporate communications concerning matters relevant to the issue of the case may be admitted in evidence. 23 The Federal Rule of Evidence governing agency or employment 24 permits the receipt in evidence of a statement against an employer or principal, even when it is an internal statement made to the employer or principal by the employee or agent. 25 Warnings by members of management may be admissible as admissions by agents of an employer. 26 In addition, where an accountant's opinion results from a valuation done by him or her at the request of a corporation, it may constitute an admission by the corporation. 27

In some cases, it has been held that a corporation is not bound by the declarations of its officers or agents while on the witness stand, on the ground that while testifying they are not acting for the corporation, but for themselves individually. 28

◆ Observation: Extrajudicial statements by corporate employees may be admitted, under the Federal Rule of Evidence governing admissions by agents and employees, for use in civil suits against their superiors, as distinguished from the corporation itself, if the factors which normally make up an agency relationship are present between the employee and the superior. 29 However, federal courts will not impute the statements of a declarant to a party-opponent who is merely the declarant's co-employee. 30

◆ Practice guide: Although statements made by an agent or servant of a corporate party during a deposition of that agent or servant may later be held to be admissible against the corporate party pursuant to the Federal Rule of Evidence governing admissions by agents and employees, the rule was not intended to permit, for substantive purposes, the introduction of the entire deposition testimony of the defendant's employee as a substitute for having the employee testify at trial. 31

§ 823 Statements relating to past transactions; statements after cessation of agency or employment

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

One's statements made after his or her agency or employment has ceased are not binding on the principal or employer ³² and cannot be given in evidence against the principal or employer. ³³ Courts sometimes state that statements by one who was engaged by another to perform a special duty in respect to a particular act or transaction, made after the duty has been performed or after the occurrence of such act or transaction, are not admissible to bind the principal. ³⁴ The Federal Rule of Evidence pertaining to statements by agents or employees ³⁵ only lifts the hearsay bar if the statement is made during the course of an employment or agency relationship, and not after the termination of such relationship. ³⁶ However, post accident statements of an agent have frequently been held admissible against the principal for the purpose of showing the latter's knowledge of a fact or condition. ³⁷

c. Persons in Privity; Former Landowners [824-827]

§ 824 Generally

View Entire Section

The declarations of a third person are admissible against a party whenever privity of estate exists between the declarant and the party, 38 the term "privity of estate" generally denoting, in this respect, a succession in rights. 39 The declarations of the privity in estate are deemed in law to be the declarations of the party. 40 Thus, whenever a party claims under, or in the interest or right of, another, the declarations of such other person pertaining to the subject of the claim are admissible against such party. 41 Accordingly, a statement of a former owner in the nature of an admission against interest is, as to real property at least, admissible against his or her successors in title, 42 provided that the matter is one which may be proved by parol evidence 43 and that the declarant possessed a proprietary interest at the time he or she made the statement. 44 The general rule that admissions against interest, made by an owner of property, are admissible against persons claiming title to the property through him or her is applicable to admissions in pleadings. 45 In addition, an admission made by a person since deceased, if relevant, is admissible against any person claiming under the deceased. 46

◆ Comment: The "admissions-by-privies" doctrine has not been expressly adopted in the Federal Rules of Evidence. The very explicitness of the Federal Rule of Evidence on admissions by party-opponents 47 suggests that the persons drafting did not intend to authorize the courts to add new categories of admissions to those stated in the Rule, and thus the admissibility of privity-based admissions is governed not by that Rule but by the residual hearsay exceptions. 48 Moreover, it has been held that the Federal Rule of Evidence governing admissions by party-opponents rejects privity as a ground of admissibility, and thus a trustee in bankruptcy is not bound by statements of the bankrupt as a successor in interest. 49

§ 825 Time of statements

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

One of the conditions under which the statement of a former owner against his or her interest is admitted in evidence against a successor as an admission binding on the successor is that the statement must be one made while the former owner had a proprietary interest in the property. 50 The declaration of a former owner made after a conveyance of the property ordinarily is not admissible against the grantee. 51 However, the rule which renders inadmissible the declarations of a former owner made after he or she has parted with all interest in the property does not have an unlimited application. It does not, for instance, operate to exclude evidence of declarations of a grantor made soon after executing a deed, to show the grantor's mental condition at the time he or she executed it. 52 Another exception to the rule is made under certain conditions in actions to set aside conveyances or transfers as fraudulent. 53

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Declarations of a former owner, otherwise admissible in evidence, 54 are admitted against a successor in interest in respect to any material matter concerning the physical condition or use of the property. 55 The rule does not authorize the reception in evidence of statements which operate to destroy or defeat a title vested in the grantee or his or her successors by virtue of the former owner's deed. 56 In other words, the declarations of a former owner are generally not admissible in evidence against a grantee or the successors of a grantee in impeachment of the deed upon which their title rests. 57 On the other hand, the declarations of a former owner in support of a deed are admissible. 58

§ 827 Statements of mortgagors and mortgagees

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In accordance with the general rule that one who acquires title to property is bound by statements against interest made by his or her predecessor in title in respect to the property, 59 any admissions by a mortgagee of real property, made while he or she owns the mortgage, are admissible against his or her assignee. 60 A different situation is presented, of course, where an admission is made by mortgagor after the execution of the mortgage. Generally, declarations of a mortgagor which are made subsequent to the execution of the mortgage and which disparage the mortgagor's title to the property are inadmissible against the mortgagee. 61

However, while declarations made by parties on the occasion of the execution of a conveyance, although relevant, have little probative value on the issue of mortgage or no mortgage, 62 utterances of the parties to a conveyance subsequent to its execution are generally regarded as admissible for the purpose of determining its character as a mortgage. 63

d. Persons Since Deceased or Under Belief of Impending Death [828-830]

§ 828 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

In the absence of a statutory provision, the death of a declarant is not in itself a ground for invoking an exception to the hearsay rule. 64 Under certain circumstances, however, statements made by a person since deceased are admissible under an exception to such rule, 65 based on necessity. 66 Under some statutes, in actions by or against the representative of deceased persons, the entries, memoranda, and declarations of the deceased, relevant to the matter in issue, may be received as evidence. 67 In addition, statements of a decedent in actions to which the decedent's estate is a party may qualify as party-admissions where they bear on civil liability. 68 Moreover, the general rule is that statements made against interest by a declarant since deceased are admissible, even between third parties. 69 Consequently, a decedent's declarations in disparagement of his or her title would be admissible as they negate the existence of a gift and are, therefore, against the decedent's pecuniary interest. 70 That such declarations are proffered by one who would benefit from their admission into evidence is not a valid ground for excluding them from the jury's consideration. 71 In order for the statement to be admissible, the declarant must have peculiar means of knowing the facts stated, and no interest to misrepresent. 72

In addition, under privity concepts, an admission made by a person since deceased, if relevant, is admissible against any person claiming under the deceased. 73 A witness may testify about the statements of the deceased agent when the suit is against the principal. 74 Declarations made by a person since deceased may also be admissible, under certain limitations and restrictions, in proof of matters of family history, relationship, and pedigree. 75 Statements of a person since deceased have also been held admissible, within limitations, upon questions of boundaries. 76

§ 829 Dying declarations; statements made under belief of impending death

Go to Supplement

In criminal cases, in the absence of statutory provision, dying declarations are admissible where the prosecution is for homicide in which the death of the declarant is the subject of the charge and the circumstances of the death are the subject of the declarations. 77 However, generally, in the absence of statutory provision, dying declarations are not admissible in civil cases, 78 including civil actions to recover for wrongful death. 79 Even though many of the courts adhering to the rule have subjected it to criticism, they have felt that it is so firmly established that any change should be undertaken only by the legislature. 80 However, in some jurisdictions it is provided by statute that in actions for wrongful death the dying declarations of the deceased as to the cause of the death are admissible in evidence in like manner and under the same rules as the dying declarations of the deceased are received in criminal actions for homicide. 81 In certain other jurisdictions, declarations of a dying person respecting the cause of his or her death uttered under a sense of impending death are made admissible by statute in both civil and criminal cases, without reference to whether the party against whom they are offered is charged with responsibility for having caused the death of the declarant. 82

The Federal Rules of Evidence 83 and the Uniform Rules of Evidence 84 provide for the admission of a statement made by a declarant, who is unavailable as a witness, 85 while believing that death was imminent, concerning the cause or circumstances of what he or she believed to be impending death. Under the federal rules, such statements are admissible only in prosecutions for homicide or in civil actions or proceedings. 86 Besides the restriction to homicide prosecutions and civil cases, the dying declarations exception is restricted with respect to the consciousness of the declarant and the type of statement uttered. In civil actions, since a dying declaration must deal with the cause and circumstances of the declarant's anticipated death, statements of love and affection, which a plaintiff seeks to introduce for purposes of proving damages, do not fall within this rule. 87 In a homicide prosecution, the dying declaration must bear on the fact of the homicide and the person by whom it was committed. 88 Such statements must be made voluntarily and in good faith. 89 In addition, such statement must be made under a sense of impending death. 90 Although there is some authority to the contrary, 91 some jurisdictions also hold that a declarant's expression of an opinion or a conclusion is not admissible as evidence of a dying declaration. 92

The dying declaration exception to the general rule prohibiting the admission of hearsay statements at trial is based on the belief that persons making dying declarations are highly unlikely to lie. 93

Under a practice approved by some courts, the prosecution states the declaration that he or she expects to prove; thereupon the court determines whether any part of a dying declaration is admissible or inadmissible; however, some courts, while conceding to the court the province of determining, in the first instance, whether sufficient foundation has been laid to make a prima facie case for the admission of a statement as a dying declaration, permit the jury to consider, upon the submission of the entire case to it, whether or not the necessary predicate for the admissibility of the declaration has been established, and thus determine whether the declaration was, in fact, a dying declaration, without reference to the action of the court in admitting the statement as such. 94 In any event, the weight of a dying declaration is determined by the jury in light of the circumstances surrounding the making of the declaration. 95 The question whether the jury should be excused during a preliminary inquiry made to determine the admissibility of a dying declaration is a matter entirely within the sound discretion of the court, and in the absence of any showing of an abuse of that discretion, the ruling will not be disturbed. 96

Even though the trial court erred in allowing inadmissible hearsay concerning what the murder victim said about her will, defendant was not prejudiced where other similar evidence was properly admitted. State v Cannada (1995) 119 NC App 311, 458 SE2d 268.

Statement of victim, repeated several times, to officer that "Darryl did it," after being shot more than a dozen times, and after officer told victim he didn't look too good and might not make it, was dying declaration where medical examiner testified wounds were so grave he could have died in matter of minutes, although he lasted for 3 hours, even though victim told companion not to worry, that he wasn't going to die. Commonwealth v Butler (1994, Pa Super) 647 A2d 928.

Deceased demonstrated consciousness of impending death, so as to allow admission of statements to wife and child as dying declaration, where deceased said: "They hit me in the heart. I am dying." Burks v State (1994, Tex Crim) 876 SW2d 877, petition for certiorari filed (Aug 22, 1994).

§ 830 --Expectation of impending death

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The central issue in determining whether a statement is a dying declaration is whether the declarant believed he or she was dying. 97 To render a dying declaration admissible, the declarant must have uttered it under a sense of impending death. 98 A mere belief that death was possible, or even probable, is not sufficient; the declarant must be virtually certain that death is imminent. 99 There must be a settled, hopeless expectation that death is near at hand and no statements indicating a hope for recovery, 1 although a declarant's urgent request for an ambulance would not necessarily show that he or she entertained some hope of recovery. 2 Similarly, the fact that the declarant requested a doctor does not, in itself, render the declaration inadmissible. 3 In addition, if the declarant believed in his or her impending death at the time of the declaration, it does not matter that, after the declaration, hope was revived and the declarant believed that he or she would recover. 4

A declarant's statements are admissible to show a belief in impending death. 5 However, although there is some authority to the contrary, 6 some courts state that the dying person does not have to state expressly that he or she knows that he or she is going to die; rather, the use of any words which are equivalent to such a statement will suffice. 7 Apart from the statements of the declarant, his or her consciousness of impending death can be proved by surrounding circumstances, such as the nature of the injury, 8 or by conduct, such as sending for a priest. 9 Furthermore, although there is some authority to the contrary, 10 there is authority that a statement by a physician or other attendant that the declarant was aware, 11 or was not aware, 12 of impending death is admissible in evidence. It is not necessary to show a statement by the declarant indicating belief that death was impending, if it is otherwise clear that the declarant did not expect to survive the injury. 13 In any event, the attendant circumstances should be carefully considered, not only to determine whether the declarant believed death was imminent, but also to confirm whether the declarant was sincere in entertaining such a belief. 14

Although it is immaterial that the declarant did not die until a significant period of time had elapsed after making the declaration, provided at the making of the declaration, the declarant believed death was impending, 15 the existence of delay may be a factor in determining whether the declarant did in fact believe that death was impending when he or she made the declaration. 16

e. Coconspirator Statements [831-856]

(1). In General [831-834]

§ 831 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Under the Federal Rules of Evidence 17 and the Uniform Rules of Evidence, 18 statements by a coconspirator made during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy may qualify as nonhearsay. Some courts have stated this rule as: where two or more persons are alleged to have conspired to commit a crime or cause injury to another, any statement made by one, pursuant to or in furtherance of the conspiratorial purpose, is admissible in evidence against any other member of the conspiracy. 19 The rule covers the admissibility of statements, not actions, unless the action is intended by the actor as an assertion. 20 Some courts state that certain statutes excepting coconspirator statements from the hearsay rule may only be used against a conspirator and are not a means by which a conspirator may introduce exculpatory evidence. 21

Evidence of coconspirator statements is admissible in civil cases, as well as criminal, where the conspiracy rule applies to tortfeasors acting in concert. 22 The preliminary requirements for introduction of coconspirator statements are the same for civil suits as in criminal actions. 23 To be admissible under the rule, the statement: (1) must have been made by a coconspirator of a party; 24 (2) must have been made during the course of the conspiracy; 25 (3) must have been made in furtherance of the conspiracy; 26 and (4) must be offered against a party-opponent. 27 Some states have additional requirements. For instance, they may require that the proffered statement contain certain indicia of reliability including personal knowledge of the assertions made in the statements, the absence of an apparent reason for the declarant to lie, spontaneity, and findings that the statement was against the declarant's penal interest. 28 However, there is also authority that neither unavailability, reliability or corroboration need be shown for the admission of coconspirator statements. 29 Moreover, the coconspirator exception is essentially unaffected by whether the statement is made in the presence or absence of the accused. 30

In a criminal prosecution, the Government is not a party against whom coconspirator statements may be offered. 31

◆ Practice guide: There are alternative methods for the introduction of a statement which is inadmissible under the coconspirator exception. Such a statement may be offered—

—for a nonhearsay use. 32

—to impeach the testimony of a coconspirator on the stand as a witness for the defense. 33

—on the ground that the defendant waived the hearsay objection by using hearsay statements otherwise inadmissible under the coconspirator exception during the presentation of his case. 34

—under other hearsay exceptions, such as the exception for declarations against interest, 35 or a statement of a declarant's then-existing mental, emotional, and physical condition. 36

§ 831 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Heroin distribution coconspirator's statement that informant, not defendant, was source of heroin was not admissible as statement against penal interest since it was not against coconspirator's penal interest and bore no other indicia of reliability. United States v Vegas (1994, CA2 NY) 27 F3d 773, corrected (1994, CA2 NY) 1994 US App LEXIS 27621 and cert den (1994, US) 115 S Ct 284.

Plea agreements of Sherman Act defendant's coconspirators were properly admitted since otherwise jury could not properly assess coconspirators' credibility as witnesses, which was relevant to establishing underlying facts that formed basis of defendant's conviction, and trial court sought to prevent any misunderstanding or misuse of pleas by giving jury detailed instructions. United States v Gaev (1994, CA3 Pa) 24 F3d 473, 1994-1 CCH Trade Cases ¶ 70578, reh, en banc, den (1994, CA3 Pa) 1994 US App LEXIS 12699.

In blind vendor's suit alleging that defendants' violation of his exclusive vending rights in state capital building deprived him of property without due process of law and that revocation of his license was in retaliation for exercise of his First Amendment rights, evidence that Director of Blind Services told plaintiff that it was his perception that certain state officials wished to have vendor removed was not admissible under coconspirator exception since it was plainly not made in furtherance of conspiracy. Copsey v Swearingen (1994, CA5 La) 36 F3d 1336, reh den (1994, CA5 La) 1994 US App LEXIS 34376.

Government's evidentiary proffer as to coconspirator statements is conditionally admitted pursuant to FRE 104(a), 104(b), and 801(d)(2)(E), subject to proof of conspiracy at trial, where government seeks to admit statements pertaining to, inter alia, membership and roles in conspiracy, methods by which cocaine was transported, and avoidance of detection by law enforcement, because proffer shows it is more likely than not that conspiracy existed, that defendants participated in it, and that statements were made during course of and in furtherance of it. United States v Messino (1994, ND Ill) 855 F Supp 973.

Coconspirator's statement that he had to travel to town where defendant lived before completing proposed drug deals was not inadmissible hearsay because evidence showed that declarant was joined with defendant in cocaine distribution conspiracy. United States v Stierwalt (1994, CA8 Mo) 16 F3d 282.

Bank robbery coconspirator's statement to testifying coconspirator that he had recruited defendants to carry out bank robbery was properly admitted under coconspirator exception since it was intended to promote conspiratorial objectives. United States v Johnson (1993, CA10) 4 F3d 904, petition for certiorari filed (Dec 2, 1993).

Although court was reluctant to condone substitution of written proffer of foundation for admission of coconspirator statements, district court did not err in ordering written proffer in instant case given its concern about potential unwieldiness of hearing, its invitation to parties to press continuing objections, and its contemporaneous rulings and limiting instructions during trial. United States v Roberts (1993, CA10 Wyo) 14 F3d 502.

District court properly admitted statements implicating defendant in drug conspiracy under coconspirator exception; it was evident from statements made by drug gang leader about loyalty and how it was enforced that conspiracy existed and that defendant was trusted member of it. United States v Bazemore (1994, CA11 Ga) 41 F3d 1431.

§ 832 Confrontation of witnesses

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment of the Constitution does not require the court to conduct an independent inquiry as to the unavailability of the declarant, 37 or the reliability of coconspirator statements which qualify as nonhearsay before such statements may be admitted against a criminal defendant, 38 since the prerequisites for admission under the Federal Rules of Evidence are identical to the requirements of the Confrontation Clause. 39 Thus, under federal law, once conspiracy is established, a coconspirator's statement can come in as the declaration of coconspirator and if it is admitted in that way, there is no violation of Sixth Amendment Confrontation Clause. 40 Some states with a rule which is a counterpart to the federal coconspirator rule also hold that statements admissible under the state rule are admissible without violation of the federal confrontation clause. 41

Furthermore, some state courts have said that the reliability of an out-of-court statement for confrontation purposes can be inferred when it falls within a "firmly rooted" hearsay exception, and have found the coconspirator exception to be "firmly rooted." 42 Some states, however, require courts to determine whether the admission of the statements of a coconspirator would violate the defendant's right to confrontation, despite the fact that statements of a coconspirator made in furtherance of the conspiracy may be admissible against other coconspirators. 43 Thus, in order to satisfy confrontation requirements, some courts are required to determine that the declarant is unavailable and the statement bears some indicia of reliability sufficient to justify its admission, even in the absence of cross-examination. 44

§ 832 ----Confrontation of witnesses [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Coconspirator's testimony at prior trial at which defendant was neither present nor represented was admissible under residual hearsay exception and did not violate confrontation clause; defendant's "near- miss" argument—that statement close to but not precise fit with recognized hearsay exception is not admissible under residual exception—would be rejected, and former testimony possessed sufficient circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness to be admissible. United States v Deeb (1994, CA11 Fla) 13 F3d 1532, 38 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1087, 7 FLW Fed C 1211.

§ 833 Evidential concept of conspiracy; difference from criminal concept

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Because the concept of conspiracy as used in an evidentiary rule is different from the concept of conspiracy as a crime, to obtain the admission of coconspirator statements it is therefore sufficient to demonstrate that the party-opponent was engaged in a joint venture with third parties and it is unnecessary to show the combination was criminal or otherwise unlawful. 45

The use of the term "conspiracy" in the Federal Rule of Evidence exempting coconspirator statements from the hearsay rule 46 is not limited to unlawful combinations, and the exclusion of certain coconspirator statements from rules governing hearsay is intended to apply to both civil actions 47 and criminal prosecutions. 48 The coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule is applicable to any offense and is not limited to prosecutions for conspiracy. 49 Coconspirator statements that qualify as "not hearsay" are admissible against fellow conspirators, even when no conspiracy charges have been brought against the declarant or the accused, 50 or where the charged conspiracy is not as broad as the conspiracy alleged as the basis for receipt of the coconspirator's statement. 51 A person need not even be charged with or found guilty of the underlying crime in order to be a coconspirator. 52

A joint venturer has been considered to be a coconspirator for purposes of the coconspirator hearsay exception even though the particular conspiracy serving as the basis for the admission of the coconspirator's statement is not the conspiracy charged in the indictment, 53 or the charge of conspiracy was severed prior to trial. 54

[SUPPLEMENT]*Case authorities:

Coconspirator's statement, made to police in defendant's absence after coconspirator's arrest and implicating both defendant and coconspirator in sexual assault, was admissible under "catch-all" exception to hearsay rule, where (1) no confrontation problem existed, in that coconspirator was present and available for cross-examination by defendant's counsel; (2) coconspirator's mental capacity at time of making of statement was established; (3) statement was against coconspirator's penal interest; and (4) details of statement were corroborated by victim's account of assault. Oliver v State (1993, Minn) 502 NW2d 775, reh den (Minn) 1993 Minn LEXIS 612.

It is not necessary to charge conspiracy in order to take advantage of the rule permitting admission of coconspirator statements that would otherwise be hearsay; it is enough to show that a criminal venture existed and that the statements took place during and in furtherance of that scheme. § 834 Effect of dismissal of conspiracy charges

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The dismissal of conspiracy charges does not inhibit the subsequent receipt of statements of coconspirators in connection with remaining substantive charges. 55 A joint venturer has been considered to be a coconspirator for purposes of the coconspirator hearsay exception even though a party has been acquitted of the conspiracy, 56 and the acquittal of the party or the declarant of conspiracy charges does not necessarily preclude, or indicate an error in, the receipt of a coconspirator's statement, 57 at least in criminal prosecutions, since the standard for determining guilt in a criminal conspiracy, namely proof beyond a reasonable doubt, is not the standard governing the admission of evidence. 58

§ 834 ----Effect of dismissal of conspiracy charges [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Defendant's acquittal of conspiracy did not retroactively make admission of coconspirator statements erroneous since, once court has determined that government has made requisite showing of conspiracy, admission of testimony under coconspirator exception to hearsay rule is not rendered retroactively improper by subsequent acquittal of alleged coconspirator. United States v Hernandez-Miranda (1996, CA11 Fla) 78 F3d 512, 9 FLW Fed C 947.

(2). Requirement That Statement be Made by Coconspirator [835, 836]

§ 835 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The coconspirator hearsay exception requires that the statement offered be made by a coconspirator, 59 and not be a statement made by a nonconspirator to a coconspirator. 60 Consequently, the statement of a confidential informant is inadmissible under the coconspirator hearsay rule. 61 However, statements of an unindicted conspirator are within the scope of the coconspirator rule. 62 Some courts, nevertheless, have refused to admit statements of a coconspirator who has been convicted of perjury under state statutes prohibiting the testimony of convicted perjurers. 63

If the other prerequisites for admission are met, a statement by a coconspirator will qualify as nonhearsay, whether the statement is a contemporaneous translation of a declaration by another coconspirator, or a subsequent recounting of what was said. 64 Proof that the translation was reliable has been found unnecessary in determining the admissibility of a translation under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule, on the ground that the accuracy of the coconspirator's translation is to be assessed by the jury on the basis of all the circumstances under which the statement was made. 65

◆ Caution: A defendant may not complain of the admission of statements which do not qualify as nonhearsay under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule, when the statements are received in evidence as a result of a tactical error by the defense counsel during the cross-examination of a government witness. 66

§ 835 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Codefendant's testimony that defendant had told him that cocaine was coming from Colombia was properly admitted as hearsay statement of coconspirator. United States v Ovalle-Marquez (1994, CA1 Puerto Rico) 36 F3d 212.

In mail fraud prosecution arising out of insurance fraud scheme involving classic automobiles, coconspirator statements should not have been introduced against two defendants each charged with separate, single conspiracy since statements related to separate conspiracies with which defendants were not involved and there was no evidence that they had knowledge of overarching conspiracy. United States v Morrow (1994, CA1 RI) 39 F3d 1228.

Narcotics coconspirator's statements made before he joined conspiracy were admissible where there was evidence of his subsequent knowledge and willingness to participate in it. United States v Gonzalez- Balderas (1994, CA5 Tex) 11 F3d 1218, reh, en banc, den (CA5 Tex) 15 F3d 1081.

Drug ledgers seized from two cocaine distribution conspirators' house and from car belonging to third conspirator were admissible as statements of coconspirators where their fingerprints were found on ledgers and there was other evidence of their involvement in conspiracy, including connections and activities with other defendants. United States v Fierro (1994, CA5 Tex) 38 F3d 761.

No error, much less plain error, occurred by trial court's admitting witness's testimony concerning conversation with person who was at defendant's place of business when cocaine shipment arrived since witness was coconspirator, hence his statement was not that of out-of-court declarant, and defendant never said anything in brief or oral argument about out-of-court statements of person who was at his place of business when cocaine arrived. United States v South (1994, CA7 Ill) 28 F3d 619.

In prosecution of former police officer for participating in gambling, drug dealing, and bribery at bar, bar owner's statement to his employee was properly admitted under coconspirator exception to hearsay rule since it was in furtherance of conspiracy; owner told employee that defendant had warned him of narcotics raid on bar and that employee should get drugs and drug dealers out of the bar. United States v Stephens (1995, CA7 Ind) 46 F3d 587, reh den (1995, CA7 Ind) 1995 US App LEXIS 5638.

Narcotics conspiracy defendant's coconspirators' statements were properly admitted against him even if they were made prior to his admitted involvement in conspiracy. United States v Mkhsian (1993, CA9 Cal) 5 F3d 1306, 93 CDOS 7225, 93 Daily Journal DAR 12273, 26 FR Serv 3d 1196.

Custodial confession of nontestifying coconspirator was not genuinely against his penal interest to extent it directly inculpated defendants and therefore was inadmissible; not only was coconspirator in custody, but his interrogators had just told him that he was facing life in prison and that U.S. Attorney would help him only if he provided substantial assistance, hence he had obvious incentive to spread blame and curry favor with authorities by implicating defendants. United States v Costa (1994, CA11 Ala) 31 F3d 1073, 8 FLW Fed C 654.

Spiral notebooks containing records of defendant's drug transactions was properly admitted as coconspirator statements since they documented ongoing series of transactions integral to conspiracy. United States v Young (1994, CA11 Ala) 39 F3d 1561, 8 FLW Fed C 893.

§ 836 Proof of declarant's identity

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Before a statement is that of a coconspirator, there must be independent proof of the defendant's and the declarant's status as members of the same ongoing conspiracy. ⁶⁷ Documents which have been authenticated pursuant to particular Federal Rules of Evidence ⁶⁸ may constitute nonhearsay when the handwriting of the documents is identified as that belonging to alleged coconspirators. ⁶⁹ Although there is some authority to the contrary, ⁷⁰ some courts permit the introduction of written statements of alleged coconspirators, even though there is a lack of proof as to the identity of the author or authors of the document, where the evidence depicts the unidentified declarant as a coconspirator, ⁷¹ as when the contents of the written statement indicate the author or authors were familiar with the activities of the conspiracy, the contents relate to the operation of the conspiracy, and the statement is found on premises associated to the operations of the conspiracy. ⁷²

◆ Observation: In its determination that a ledger of drug transactions was inadmissible because the government failed to prove the identity of the author or authors of the ledger entries, one court rejected the suggestion that the foundational requirements under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule may be equated with the standards for authentication under the Federal Rules of Evidence 73 ruling that a separate foundational threshold must be satisfied before the coconspirator statement is admissible under the coconspirator exception. 74

Lists recording information concerning smuggling illegal aliens were held admissible, even though the author of those lists was not identified at trial, since the contents of the lists demonstrated that the unknown author was familiar with the workings of the conspiracy, and that the lists were utilized to maintain information necessary to continue the smuggling operation, where the lists were seized by law enforcement officers from the house considered the headquarters of the operation, and there was no evidence that the lists were made at anytime other than during the conspiracy or that the lists were made for reasons other than to further the conspiracy. United States v De Gudino (CA7 Ill) 722 F2d 1351, 14 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1692.

(3). Requirement That Statement be Made During Course of Conspiracy [837-841]

§ 837 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The coconspirator hearsay exception requires that the coconspirator's statement be made during the course of the conspiracy. 75 Some courts state that there must be a showing that the statements or acts of the coconspirator were made while the conspiracy was active, that is after it was formed and before it ended. 76 There is other authority that a statement of an alleged coconspirator must be made during the course of the conspiracy as that time period is defined in the charging document. 77 However, approximate dates in an indictment are not controlling, and some courts provide that a conspiracy does not necessarily expire after the last act charged in the indictment; it expires after the last overt act whether charged or not. 78 Generally the duration of a conspiracy, for the purpose of applying the coconspirator exemption, is not limited by the commission of the elements of the underlying crime. 79 Conduct before or after the commission of the elements of the underlying crime are part of a conspiracy, if the conduct is either in planning, preparing for, or committing the crime, or in eluding detection for, or protecting the fruits of the crime. 80 Concealment may also occur during the course of the conspiracy. 81 The determination of whether the statement was made in the course of the conspiracy depends upon the scope of the agreement entered into by the conspirators and is thus determined according to the facts in each case. 82 If it is shown that the coconspirator statement was made within the approximate timeframe of the conspiracy, then admission of a coconspirator statement will not be barred because of a failure to prove the exact date the statement was made 83 or by a failure to prove the exact date the alleged conspiracy began. 84 However, statements made long after the commission of a crime may not be admissible. 85

Although a preconspiracy statement falls outside the rule, 86 a statement by one coconspirator after the inception of the conspiracy is admissible against a party who at the time the statement was made had not yet joined the conspiracy, 87 as was true under common law. 88

With respect to written documents, dates and records of payments noted in the document itself may be used to prove that the document was compiled during the course of the conspiracy. 89 The failure to prove whether the transactions reflected in written documents or records occurred during the course of the alleged conspiracy may preclude the documents from being admissible against the party-opponent as a coconspirator statement. 90

§ 837 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Heroin distribution ringleader's statement to coconspirator who ran street team that he got information about police patrols from his mother, who was police officer and coconspirator, was properly admitted under coconspirator exception since statement was part of flow of information between coconspirators which furthered conspiracy. United States v Wesson (1994, CA7 Ill) 33 F3d 788.

Heroin distribution coconspirator's statements were admissible despite defendant's claim that they were made prior to date of conspiracy, since statements of defendant and coconspirator supported conclusion that conspiracy did exist when statements were made. United States v Williams (1995, CA7 Ill) 44 F3d 614, reh, en banc, den (1995, CA7 Ill) 1995 US App LEXIS 6624, reported in full (1995, CA7 Ill) 44 F3d 614.

Coconspirators' statements are admissible in defendant's criminal trial under FRE 801(d)(2)(E), because government showed by preponderance of evidence (1) existence of conspiracy, (2) defendant's participation in conspiracy, and (3) that statements were made during course of and in furtherance of conspiracy. United States v Sims (1995, ND Ill) 879 F Supp 837.

Evidence of bank fraud co- defendant's statements were properly admitted under coconspirator exception to hearsay rule since there was sufficient evidence of conspiracy between defendant and declarant, and statements were made in furtherance of conspiracy as they related to terms and conditions of loan underlying criminal charges and who knew of its true nature. Feingold v United States (1995, CA8 Mo) 49 F3d 437.

Coconspirator's statement made prior to formation of conspiracy involving defendant should not have been admitted in prosecution for theft of goods in interstate commerce, but its admission was harmless since it was insignificant in case against him, which was strong. United States v Garcia (1994, CA11 Fla) 13 F3d 1464, 7 FLW Fed C 1217, petition for certiorari filed (May 9, 1994).

In action by public entities that purchase repackaged chlorine for water treatment against distributors and repackagers of chlorine alleging price-fixing conspiracy, hearsay testimony of president of one of defendant corporations is inadmissible to prove conspiracy, because plaintiffs failed to show that statements by alleged coconspirator were made during course and in furtherance of conspiracy. City of Tuscaloosa v Harcros Chems. (1995, ND Ala) 877 F Supp 1504, 1995-1 CCH Trade Cases ¶ 70967.

Testimony regarding an out-of-court statement by the codefendant in which he implicated himself and the defendant in a murder was properly admitted into evidence under the co-conspirator exception to the hearsay rule where the statement was made only an hour after the murder at issue and in the course of a conversation in which the codefendant asked the witness to recommend a hotel where he and the defendant could stay until nightfall, after which they planned to travel to New York. Commonwealth v Cull (1995, Pa) 656 A2d 476.

§ 838 Termination of conspiracy

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Incriminating declarations of coconspirators made in the absence of or without the knowledge of the accused, after the conspiracy has come to an end, are inadmissible. 91 A coconspirator's statement made after the termination of the conspiracy, whether in success or failure, is generally inadmissible to prove the guilt of one other than the declarant, 92 and coconspirators are entitled to an instruction that such statement may be considered only against the conspirator who made it. 93

Statements of coconspirators are generally admissible if made before the last overt act of the conspiracy has taken place, 94 including statements regarding the distribution of the proceeds of the conspiracy, 95 and statements made in connection with payments for assistance in furthering the goals of the conspiracy. 96 Statements made during an escape from law enforcement agents constitute statements made during the course of a conspiracy, since arriving undetected or escaping is a primary objective of a conspiracy. 97 However, in a conspiracy to assist escape, statements made while escapees are temporarily safe are inadmissible since once fugitives reach temporary safety a conspiracy to assist escape terminates. 98 The cessation of activity in furtherance of the conspiracy does not constitute the termination of the conspiracy so as to render subsequent statements made between conspirators inadmissible, when the cessation is considered merely a suspension of conspiratorial activity. 99 Acts of acceptance of a completed transaction within the scope of the activity conducted by the conspirators may be sufficient to allow statements made in connection with that transaction to be admitted against fellow conspirators, even though a mastermind of the conspiracy has instructed participants that the particular transaction not take place. 1

§ 839 --Renunciation of or withdrawal from conspiracy

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A party may renounce a conspiracy before its termination, so that statements made thereafter by other conspirators may not be offered against that party. 2 A conspirator's participation in an ongoing conspiracy is presumed to continue unless the conspirator demonstrates withdrawal from the conspiracy through affirmative action, such as a full confession to authorities or by conduct intended to reasonably communicate to coconspirators the abandonment of the conspiracy and its goals. 3 Upon proof of participation in the conspiracy, the burden shifts to the alleged conspirator to show withdrawal. 4 That the alleged conspirator has ceased to actively participate has been found insufficient to prove withdrawal from the conspiracy in order to preclude admission against that party of coconspirator statements that qualify as nonhearsay under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule. 5

§ 839 --Renunciation of or withdrawal from conspiracy [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Narcotics defendant's taped post-arrest statements to coconspirator were properly admitted notwithstanding claim that he had withdrawn from conspiracy since defendant did not inform coconspirator of his withdrawal from conspiracy, nor did he make "clean breast" to authorities as evidenced by his continued association with known targets of DEA investigation and attempts to warn coconspirator of police involvement. United States v Hubbard (1994, CA7 Ill) 22 F3d 1410, reh, en banc, den (1994, CA7 Ill) 1994 US App LEXIS 15419.

§ 840 --Effect of conspirator's arrest

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Although the arrest of some of the conspirators may be sufficient to terminate a conspiracy and render any postarrest statements inadmissible as coconspirator statements made during the course of the conspiracy, 6 the arrest of some, but not all, of the conspirators will not necessarily terminate the conspiracy as a matter of law and the termination of the conspiracy must be proved, since it is possible that a conspiracy may continue despite the arrests. 7 The test is whether the remaining conspirators are able to continue with the conspiracy. 8 The arrest of a conspirator who is neither the declarant nor the party against whom the statement is offered does not affect the admissibility of the declarant's statements where the conspiracy is found to have continued beyond the arrest. 9 A conspiracy can be said to continue up to the last possible moment when pursuit of the main objective is still possible, and accordingly, courts have admitted statements made upon apprehension by law enforcement officers, but just before actual arrest. 10

The arrest of the declarant is often found to terminate the declarant's participation in the conspiracy, 11 so that the declarant's postarrest statements do not qualify as admissible coconspirator statements, 12 and thus cannot be used against fellow conspirators. 13 Thus, while an accomplice's guilty plea may be admissible if it serves a legitimate purpose and is coupled with a cautionary jury instruction, 14 a co-defendant's guilty plea is not admissible to prove the defendant's guilt. 15 Consequently, a coconspirator's plea of guilty to the crime charged is inadmissible in the separate trial of a defendant to support the prosecution's contention of the defendant's complicity. 16 Nevertheless, some courts have found that an arrest of a conspirator does not necessarily terminate his or her involvement in the conspiracy as a matter of law, and postarrest statements of the declarant which were made in furtherance of the conspiracy have been admitted against fellow conspirators, who were at large at the time the statement was made. 17 Statements by a coconspirator, who is at large and still operating in furtherance of the ongoing conspiracy may be introduced against another conspirator who was under arrest at the time the statements were made, 18 at least where the arrest of the other conspirator occurred shortly before the statement was made and the declarant was unaware of the arrest. 19

Postarrest statements of coconspirators regarding activities during the course of the conspiracy may be excluded as evidence against fellow conspirators on the ground that the statements were not made in furtherance of the conspiracy. 20

§ 840 --Effect of conspirator's arrest [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Statements made by drug coconspirators were admissible against defendant even though they were made after defendant was in jail since there was no evidence that defendant had withdrawn from conspiracy; defendant's incarceration, by itself, did not establish her withdrawal from conspiracy. United States v Zarnes (1994, CA7 Ill) 33 F3d 1454.

A statement made by a codefendant in a prosecution for kidnapping and conspiracy to commit theft by threat was not within the scope of the coconspirator's admission exception to the hearsay rule when it was made to police following arrest rather than in furtherance of the conspiracy; however, the statement was too vague to be prejudicial. People v Bolla (2d Dist) 114 Ill App 3d 442, 70 Ill Dec 118, 448 NE2d 996.

An instruction to the jury must deal precisely with the issue of how the guilty plea evidence can and cannot be used, and, at the very least, the district court should instruct the jury that a codefendant's guilty plea is no proof whatsoever of the defendant's guilt and must be disregarded completely when determining his guilt or innocence. Virgin Islands v Mujahid (CA3 VI) 990 F2d 111.

Footnote 16. State v Ellis, 161 W Va 40, 239 SE2d 670.

In a prosecution for criminal conspiracy, theft by deception, deceptive business practices, and aiding in the consummation of a crime, the trial court committed reversible error in permitting portions of an absent coconspirator's guilty plea to be read into the record in the presence of the jury for the purpose of establishing the unavailability of the alleged coconspirator where the information concerning the guilty plea was highly prejudicial and directly linked the defendant to crimes for which he was on trial, but afforded him no opportunity to cross-examine the coconspirator. Commonwealth v Maleno, 267 Pa Super 560, 407 A2d 51.

But see People v Lewis (3d Dept) 107 App Div 2d 838, 484 NYS2d 271, stating that, although the failure of the trial court to admonish the jury not to draw any inference of the defendant's guilt from an accomplice's plea of guilty was error, where the evidence of guilt was overwhelming, such factor was harmless.

Tape-recorded telephone conversations between the declarant and a third party were admissible against coconspirators, who were under arrest at the time the conversations occurred, since the declarant was unaware that the conspiracy to sell stolen securities had been terminated with the arrest of the coconspirators, and absent such knowledge, the declarant was seeking to carry out the next step of the scheme, collecting his commission for introducing buyer and seller. United States v Taylor (CA9 Nev) 802 F2d 1108, 21 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1233, cert den 479 US 1094, 94 L Ed 2d 164, 107 S Ct 1309.

§ 841 Concealment of conspiracy

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A coconspirator's statement made after the conspiracy has ended is not admissible on the theory that the statement was made in the course of an implied conspiracy aimed at preventing detection and punishment, 21 since every criminal endeavor necessarily contemplates nondisclosure after the deed is done. 22 Although acts of concealment can have significance where they are done in furtherance of the main criminal objectives of the conspiracy, when acts of concealment are done after central objectives have been obtained, for purpose only of covering up after crime, they may be inadmissible. 23 Thus, coconspirator statements made primarily for the purpose of concealing the conspiracy are outside the scope of the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule when the duration of the alleged conspiracy is found not to extend to concealment; 24 but hearsay statements made by a conspirator during the concealment phase of a conspiracy may be admissible. 25 Some courts hold that efforts on the part of a joint venturer to conceal the occurrence of the enterprise's unlawful purpose warrant the inference that the joint venture continued through the time that the statements were made; 26 and some courts simply hold that statements of a conspirator made after the perpetration of a crime for the purpose of concealing the crime are admissible. 27

In addition, statements aimed at concealment may be considered within the exclusion for coconspirator statements if it can be shown that concealment is basic to the venture by its nature, 28 as in instances where the object of the conspiracy is not insular, but continuous, 29 and the concealment is intended to prolong the conspiracy. 30

(4). Requirement That Statement be Made in Furtherance of Conspiracy [842-845]

§ 842 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

To qualify as "not hearsay" under the Federal Rules of Evidence 31 and the Uniform Rules of Evidence, 32 as well as state law, 33 it is required that the coconspirator's statement be made "in furtherance of" the conspiracy. Similarly, some courts provide that in order for statements or acts to be admissible they must be in pursuance of the objectives of the conspiracy. 34 The "in furtherance of a conspiracy" requirement is to be construed to protect the accused against the idle chatter of criminal partners and inadvertently misreported or deliberately fabricated evidence. 35 However, there is some authority that a statement may be susceptible to alternative interpretations and still be in furtherance of the conspiracy; the statement need not have been exclusively, or even primarily, made to further the conspiracy in order to be admissible under the coconspirator exception. 36

Statements are considered in furtherance of a conspiracy when the statements tend to advance or promote the object of the conspiracy, 37 as opposed to thwarting its purpose, 38 including statements that prompt the listener to respond in a way which facilitates carrying out the objectives of the conspiracy. 39 Statements which simply implicate one coconspirator in an attempt to shift the blame from another cannot be characterized as having been made to advance any objective of the conspiracy. 40 The court looks to the declarant's intent in making the statement, not the actual effect of the statement. 41 That the statement actually further the conspiratorial objectives is not required. 42

Whether a statement is in furtherance of the conspiracy is determined in the context in which the particular statement is made. 43 The courts look for a reasonable basis upon which to conclude that the statement furthered the conspiracy. 44 The court may consider the nature of the statement, as well as take into account the time and circumstances under which the statement was made in determining whether it was intended to further the scheme's ultimate objective. 45 Poststatement events may be used to prove that statement was made during course of conspiracy. 46 In addition, although the purpose of a conspirator's declarations may not be readily discernible because the party to whom the conspirator speaks is unknown as is the listener's relationship to the alleged conspiracy, the declarations may still be admitted under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule where it appears the coconspirator's declarations were intended to induce the listener to join the conspiracy. 47 There is some authority that the determination of whether a statement was made in furtherance of a conspiracy can, in the appropriate circumstances, be made by reference to the statement alone. 48

The "in furtherance" requirement has been construed broadly 49 and has been found satisfied in the context of statements—

—reciting past occurrences in an effort to map out future strategy, 50 or to facilitate a conspirator's ability to carry out assigned duties. 51

—identifying members of a conspiracy to coconspirators, 52 or to persons seeking to buy or sell contraband. 53

—enlisting another person to join the conspiracy, 54 even though the listening party is more eager to join the venture than the declarant is to allow the listening party to join, 55 or even though the invitation is declined. 56

—inviting a coconspirator to participate in a further stage of the conspiracy. 57

—urging a witness to lie to the authorities 58 or making threats to prevent a witness from telling the truth. 59 —urging a third person not to reveal the conspiracy. 60

- insuring continued participation by a coconspirator, 61 including statements intended to allay fears or suspicions. 62
- encouraging a coconspirator to carry out the conspiracy. 63
- keeping coconspirators abreast of the enterprise's progress. 64
- instilling fear as a means of pressuring a victim, 65 or fellow conspirator. 66
- accounting for transactions of the criminal enterprise. 67
- involving efforts to wind up the conspiracy after the attainment of its objective, 68 including references to actions taken by conspirators to destroy incriminating evidence. 69 Records kept by coconspirators may also be statements in furtherance of a conspiracy. 70

A mere narrative statement serving no immediate or future conspiratorial purpose does not satisfy the requirement, 71 whether communicated to outsiders 72 or to another conspirator. 73 Statements directed toward nonconspirators that merely inform the listener or reader of the coconspirator's activities are inadmissible under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule, where there is no intent to induce participation in the conspiracy. 74 Idle conversation is also inadmissible as not being in furtherance of the conspiracy. 75

Other declarations that do not satisfy the requirement that the statements be made in furtherance of the conspiracy include statements discouraging furtherance of the conspiracy, 76 or indicating that one conspirator had gone off on a "frolic" of his or her own. 77 Revelations of past conduct, which if anything have the effect of frustrating the conspiracy, do not qualify as in furtherance of the conspiracy. 78 Moreover, a statement by a coconspirator which relates to future dealings that are not connected to the current conspiracy and do not involve the party against whom the declarations are offered is not in furtherance of the conspiracy and is inadmissible against the party. 79 Declarations of a conspirator regarding the status of a coconspirator's future plans that are made out of the coconspirator's presence are inadmissible against the coconspirator where the statements do not promote an object of the alleged conspiracy. 80

§ 842 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Witness' statement, that coconspirator asked him to talk to defendant about selling cocaine to him directly, was properly admitted as coconspirator's statement in furtherance of conspiracy; even if it was made as part of separate conspiracy by others to create own cocaine distribution scheme and eliminate middle man, common objective of either was to sell cocaine acquired from defendant. United States v Goins (1993, CA4 NC) 11 F3d 441, 38 Fed Rules Evid Serv 656, petition for certiorari filed (Feb 22, 1994).

In prosecution of correctional residential counselors for bribery conspiracy scheme, one coconspirator's statements to newly released resident about another conspirator were properly admitted under coconspirator exception since they were designed to enlist participation of newly released resident's friend who was soon to arrive at facility and wanted to participate in bribery scheme. United States v Ford (1994, CA7 Ill) 21 F3d 759.

Witness's testimony that two codefendants in cocaine distribution conspiracy stated that they obtained their drugs from defendant was admissible under coconspirator exception since statements could be interpreted as attempts to recruit witness into conspiracy and therefore as having been made in furtherance of conspiracy. United States v Guyton (1994, CA7 Ill) 36 F3d 655.

Coconspirator's statements to his wife were in furtherance of conspiracy and therefore admissible under coconspirator exception where, in view of wife's mother's role in transporting marijuana on numerous occasions, his reference to transportation arrangements were made to relate need for wife's mother to remain involved in conspiracy, and coconspirator's statements to wife about substance of telephone calls he had made from Mexico to defendant were likely made to advise her of extent to which law enforcement authorities had detected conspiracy and of likelihood of their being unable to return to U.S. United States v Curtis (1994, CA7 Ill) 37 F3d 301.

Statement that defendant had come to witness day after government seized money from coconspirator in sting operation and stated that part of it had belonged to him was admissible coconspirator statement since it was in furtherance of conspiracy; statement was made in context of attempt to get more information about seizure. United States v Powers (1996, CA7 Ill) 75 F3d 335.

Coconspirator's statement that he and another were in drug business identified another coconspirator and was admissible as statement made in furtherance of conspiracy, and another coconspirator's statement that his relationship to defendant "was drugs" was likewise in furtherance of conspiracy because it revealed existence of conspiracy and identified conspirator. United States v Escobar (1995, CA8 Mo) 50 F3d 1414, reh, en banc, den (1995, CA8) 1995 US App LEXIS 10451 and reh, en banc, den (1995, CA8) 1995 US App LEXIS 10536.

Translator's statements were admissible against cocaine distribution defendants as coconspirator statements where translator was acting as middleman in order to facilitate cocaine transaction between coconspirators and undercover agent, translator had financial interest in accurately translating coconspirators' statements, and reliability of translations was confirmed by agent through his understanding of Spanish. United States v Garcia (1994, CA9 Ariz) 16 F3d 341, 94 CDOS 956, 94 Daily Journal DAR 1621, 38 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1545, later proceeding (CA9 Ariz) 1994 US App LEXIS 3249.

Statement of cocaine distribution conspirator that defendant had Mexican connection that supplied declarant with drugs to keep his business going was in furtherance of conspiracy so as to be admissible under coconspirator exception to hearsay rule; witness knew that declarant, his brother, was having problems with suppliers and evidence would support conclusion that statement was made to witness to indicate that deliveries of cocaine would continue, and regardless of defendant's claim that declarant did not trust his brother, declarant hired him to transport shipments with other people and kept him informed of certain material aspects of conspiracy. United States v Gutierrez (1995, CA10 Colo) 48 F3d 1134, cert den (1995, US) 63 USLW 3891.

Statements of co-conspirators are admissible in retrial of defendant on charge of conspiracy to distribute cocaine following remand, where co-conspirators were acquitted of conspiracy during first trial, because government demonstrated by preponderance of evidence that conspiracy existed, that declarant and defendant were both members of conspiracy, and that statements were made in furtherance of conspiracy; fact that co-conspirators were acquitted was based on beyond-reasonable-doubt standard, not preponderance-of-evidence standard by which admissibility question is to be analyzed. United States v Lacey (1994, DC Kan) 856 F Supp 599.

The evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions of conspiracy to commit armed robbery and attempted armed robbery where it tended to show that defendant told his accomplice of his plan to rob an undercover police officer and his companion of marijuana that the officer and his companion proposed to sell to defendant; defendant armed himself with a pistol and chambered the weapon as he and the accomplice drove to a meeting with the officer and his companion; at the scene, defendant's accomplice knocked the officer down as he had been instructed to do by defendant as part of the robbery plan; and defendant shot the officer when the officer attempted to get out his weapon. The conduct of defendant and his accomplice supports an implied understanding between them to use a gun in the commission of the crime, and the failure of the conspirators to actually take the marijuana did not negate the attempted armed robbery. State v Bell (1994) 338 NC 363, 450 SE2d 710.

§ 843 Statements to law enforcement agents and informants

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The fact that the coconspirator was speaking to a law enforcement agent working undercover is not material to the admission of the statement against a fellow conspirator under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule. 81 On the other hand, conspirator statements to a known police agent are admissible under the coconspirator hearsay exception only if intended to allow the conspiracy to continue. 82 For instance, coconspirator statements are admissible even when the agent's identity is known to the declarant, if the declarant's object is to put the agent off the scent of an ongoing criminal venture. 83

Statements to conspirators turned informants may also satisfy the requirement that the statement be made in furtherance of the conspiracy. 84 Although statements by conspirators, who are acting as government informants, are inadmissible against fellow conspirators because the informant's statements cannot be said to further any conspiracy, 85 those statements may be admitted on other grounds, as when the implication of a conversation would be unintelligible if the informant's portion of the conversation was excised and if the jury is cautioned as to use of the informant's statements. 86 The fact that during the conversation with a conspirator the informant was eliciting information to gather evidence has been found not to preclude admission of the coconspirator's statements on the ground that the statements were not in furtherance of the conspiracy. 87

There is some authority that a conspiracy for purposes of the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule may not be formed between a single criminally motivated person and a government agent or informer. 88

The declaration by a coconspirator to drug enforcement agents that the money he was carrying belonged to someone else and that he was just a courier fell within scope of the exclusion for coconspirator statements as being made in furtherance of the conspiracy to possess and distribute drugs, since the fact that the declarant spoke to known government agents did not negate the declarant's purpose of furthering the conspiracy by avoiding detection, where the declarant gave the information in a noncustodial setting so that he would be allowed to go on his way, which he in fact was allowed to do and the alleged conspiracy continued for another year. United States v Levesque (DC NH) 625 F Supp 428, affd without op (CA1 NH) 879 F2d 853.

§ 844 Postarrest statements

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

There is some authority that, under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule, statements made by an arrested coconspirator cannot be used against fellow coconspirators, but statements made by an unarrested coconspirator who was still operating in furtherance of the ongoing conspiracy may be introduced against arrested conspirator. 89 Thus, where coconspirators were in custody when they made their confessions, the objects of the conspiracy were complete, and the coconspirators were not attempting to conceal the crime or their cohorts, the statements were not made in furtherance of the conspiracy. 90 Nevertheless, other authority holds that statements by a conspirator who has been arrested may be admissible against coconspirators who at the time the statement was made remained at large, where the arrest did not terminate the conspiracy and the statements were in furtherance of the conspiracy. 91 However, even if the arrest of a conspirator does not terminate a conspiracy, postarrest declarations to gain favor for a plea bargain, 92 including confessions detailing the activities of the conspiracy, are not in furtherance of the conspiracy. 93 Telephone conversations between law enforcement officers and a coconspirator may be admitted against a conspirator, who was under arrest at the time of the conversations, where the coconspirator was unaware of the arrest and was still pursuing the objectives of the conspiracy. 94

§ 845 Statements to avoid detection

View Entire Section

Go to Supplement

Whether statements concerning the concealment of a conspiracy are made in furtherance of the ongoing conspiracy depends upon the facts of each case. 95 In situations where concealment is essential to the success of the object of the conspiracy, statements aimed at concealment or avoiding detection may be found to be made in furtherance of the conspiracy and admissible against fellow conspirators under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule. 96 If the evidence warrants a finding of an accused's participation in a conspiracy to suppress or fabricate evidence of the crime after its commission, an act or statement of a coconspirator in the accomplishment of this continuing conspiracy is admissible against the accused. 97 However, some courts hold that statements aimed at concealing activities of a conspiracy from a grand jury, when made after the conspiracy has terminated due to the arrest of some of the conspirators, are not admissible against fellow conspirators. 98

§ 845 ----Statements to avoid detection [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Statements by unindicted coconspirator revealed that he and defendant were acting in furtherance of conspiracy to steal in course of their work as baggage handlers because they were seeking to avoid detection of conspiracy to steal camera, and statements were thus properly admitted against defendant. United States v Brookins (1995, CA7 Ill) 52 F3d 615.

Statements of crack cocaine distribution conspirator were in furtherance of conspiracy where they identified members of conspiracy, were designed to allay fears and suspicions of party to whom they were addressed, and attempted to induce that person's future involvement with coconspirator. United States v Williamson (1995, CA10 Kan) 53 F3d 1500, 41 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1298.

Statements by cocaine distribution conspirator's mother, also conspirator, were in furtherance of conspiracy and therefore properly admitted where she was describing efforts to avoid detection and warning person to whom she was talking of danger of getting close to another conspirator's wife, who had role in triggering police investigation. United States v Edmond (1995, App DC) 52 F3d 1080.

Statements made during a discussion between coconspirators as to whether it could be determined that the fire which damaged the building was caused by arson were held to be made in furtherance of the conspiracy to defraud the insurance company, since the insurance company had not paid the insurance claim on the fire-damaged building when the conversations occurred, and detection of the arson would thwart collection of the proceeds. United States v Howard (CA6 Ky) 770 F2d 57, 18 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1006, cert den 475 US 1022, 89 L Ed 2d 325, 106 S Ct 1213, reh den 475 US 1104, 89 L Ed 2d 907, 106 S Ct 1507.

While efforts to conceal a criminal conspiracy are normally distinct from the conspiracy itself, and not automatically to be treated as a part or extension of that conspiracy, the District Court did not err in admitting statements made by coconspirators allegedly covering up earlier voter fraud where the defendants were both charged with two distinct conspiracies, one to defraud voters of the right to have votes counted in a federal election, and the other to obstruct justice by fraudulently impeding the investigation of alleged vote fraud, and statements made relative to the cover up were made during course of a conspiracy to obstruct justice. United States v Townsley (CA8 Mo) 843 F2d 1070, 25 Fed Rules Evid Serv 476, on reh, en banc (CA8 Mo) 856 F2d 1189, cert dismd 499 US 944, 113 L Ed 2d 461, 111 S Ct 1406 and (disapproved on other grounds by Powers v Ohio, 499 US 400, 113 L Ed 2d 411, 111 S Ct 1364, 91 CDOS 2259, 91 Daily Journal DAR 3732) as stated in Holland v McGinnis (CA7 Ill) 963 F2d 1044, cert den (US) 122 L Ed 2d 360, 113 S Ct 1053.

(5). Proof of Conspiracy and Participants [846-856]

§ 846 Generally

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table Go to Supplement

The standard for determining the admissibility of statements made by coconspirators is less than that required to convict a defendant of conspiracy to commit an offense. 99 The court is not bound by the rules of evidence when determining preliminary questions 1 such as the prerequisites for admission of a coconspirator statement under the Federal Rules of Evidence coconspirator exception 2 to the hearsay rule. 3 However, there is authority that hearsay evidence of a conspiracy should only be admitted when accompanied by tangible, material evidence of the conspiracy, despite rules that a trial court in determining preliminary questions of admissibility is not bound by the rules of evidence in conducting a hearing on admissibility. 4 This requirement addresses the inherent unreliability of conspirator testimony, which is not only hearsay but hearsay from a particularly incredible witness. 5 Nevertheless, in determining compliance with the Federal Rules of Evidence coconspirator hearsay exception, 6 the court is not required to inquire independently into the reliability of the coconspirator statement at issue. 7

The prerequisites for admission of coconspirator statements may be shown by way of party-admissions 8 that qualify as non-hearsay, 9 by adoptive admissions of a party 10 that qualify as non-hearsay, 11 as well as by statements of the declarant that may be received as against the declarant's penal interest. 12

The prerequisites for the admission of a coconspirator's statement against a fellow conspirator have been satisfied by evidence independent of the challenged declaration, in instances where the offering party has shown—

—narcotics transactions with government informants or undercover agents. 13

—illegal firearms transactions with government undercover agents. 14

—by way of expert testimony, that it was highly probable that it was the defendant's handwriting on the altered or forged money orders. 15

§ 846 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Admission of uncharged acts of extortion, combined with jury's instructions, did not constructively amend indictment by permitting jury to convict defendants of extortion on basis different from that advanced by grand jury, since it was not necessary for jury to find that any acts of extortion occurred, whether charged or uncharged, to find defendants guilty of Hobbs Act conspiracy. United States v Clemente (1994, CA2 NY) 22 F3d 477, cert den sub nom Demolfetto v United States (1994, US) 1994 US LEXIS 6736.

Court properly found that conspiracy existed between driver and passenger of van in which marijuana was discovered, so that driver's hearsay statements were admissible against passenger; passenger's repeatedly attempting to walk away from van during questioning by police suggested that he was trying to keep police from discovering marijuana and conflicting stories told by them suggested they were attempting to deceive police as to their activities. United States v Carter (1994, CA6 Tenn) 14 F3d 1150, 1994 FED App. 25P, reh, en banc, den (CA6 Tenn) 1994 US App LEXIS 5952.

Admission of cocaine distribution conspirator's prior arrest at airport at which gun and digital scale with cocaine residue were found, along with coconspirator's presence at airport to meet conspirator, was proper as evidence in support of conspiracy rather than mere instance of past bad act. United States v McMurray (1994, CA8 Neb) 34 F3d 1405, reh, en banc, den (1994, CA8 Neb) 1994 US App LEXIS 29125 and reh, en banc, den (1994, CA8 Neb) 1994 US App LEXIS 29274 and reh, en banc, den (1994, CA8 Neb) 1994 US App LEXIS 29668.

In prosecution for conspiracy to defraud U.S. by impeding IRS in assessment and collection of taxes, evidence of defendant's failure to file income tax returns and of tax lien against business of which he was trustee was relevant to show his participation in conspiracy by showing tax motive, negative attitude toward payment of taxes, and intent to violate his duty to pay income taxes. United States v Scott (1994, CA10 Kan) 37 F3d 1564, 94 TNT 197-40, cert den (1995, US) 1995 US LEXIS 428.

Evidence of cocaine distribution conspirator's subsequent involvement in methamphetamine transaction was not admissible other crimes evidence as to his involvement in conspiracy in earlier of two time periods since two- year gap exceeded bounds of relevance, but it was probative of his intent during later time period because it was contemporaneous with it. United States v Mitchell (1995, App DC) 49 F3d 769.

In prosecution for crimes that occurred while defendant was with group of young men, trial court did not err in admitting evidence of defendant's gang membership where defendant told one victim that he was member of Crips, where evidence was introduced for most part by complaining witnesses who told of Crips rhymes and sayings being repeated by defendant and others in his group either before or during commission of crimes, and where there was considerable evidence that they acted in concert and aiding and abetting instruction was given. Most noteworthy feature of case was that group of young men and boys acted in concert in bullying and brutalizing their neighbors. Their numbers were intimidating to their victims, and it was doubtful that they could have perpetrated their crimes without strength of group. Evidence was relevant and part of res gestae. State v Walker (1992) 252 Kan 117, 843 P2d 203.

§ 847 Independent evidence and use of coconspirator statement as proof

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

While some cases state that the Supreme Court declined to decide whether there must be any evidence independent of coconspirator statements to determine that a conspiracy has been established by a preponderance of the evidence, 16 many cases hold that there must be independent evidence establishing the existence of a conspiracy 17 and connecting the defendant and the declarant to it. 18 When a proponent of a coconspirator's statement offers no additional proof of the defendant's knowledge of and participation in the conspiracy, the statement must be excluded from evidence; but, where some additional proof is offered, the court must determine whether such proof, viewed in light of the coconspirator's statement itself, demonstrates by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant knew of and participated in the conspiracy. 19 While there is some authority that the existence of the conspiracy must be proved by evidence which does not include the statements of the coconspirator, 20 other courts consider the statements in determining whether a conspiracy existed and whether the defendant and declarant were members of it, 21 and whether the statement was made during the course of and in furtherance of the conspiracy, 22 at least where the substance of those declarations is corroborated by other evidence independent of the out-of-court statements. 23 The government may be required to submit a pretrial written proffer setting forth independent non-hearsay evidence proving the conspiracy and the participation of the defendant and the declarant before statements of the defendant's alleged coconspirators will be admitted under the coconspirator hearsay exception. 24

Case authorities:

In drug distribution conspiracy trial, police officer's testimony regarding drug distribution activities of defendant and his suppliers who were not named in indictment was not "other crimes" evidence but was related to charged conspiracy; it constituted predicate evidence necessary to provide context to drug distribution scheme that took place within charged time frame and, by providing jury with background information on defendant's activities during preparatory stages of conspiracy, served to complete story of crime on trial. United States v Kennedy (1994, CA4 Md) 32 F3d 876.

Evidence of marijuana conspiracy defendant's arrest in New Mexico fell within indictment's description of conspirators' plan to from time to time travel in interstate commerce with intent to distribute proceeds of their unlawful activity and promote unlawful activity; therefore, arrest was sufficiently factually linked with charged conduct, and prejudicial effect did not outweigh probative value of evidence. United States v Oleson (1995, CA6 Mich) 44 F3d 381, 1994 FED App 428P, reh, en banc, den (1995, CA6) 1995 US App LEXIS 4653.

Co-conspirator statements were properly admitted against extortion defendant where independent evidence established existence of conspiracy and defendant's involvement in it. United States v Clay (1994, CA8 Mo) 16 F3d 892.

Money laundering coconspirator's statements could not serve as independent evidence of connection between him and coconspirators to permit its admission against latter. United States v Castaneda (1994, CA9 Cal) 16 F3d 1504, 94 CDOS 1170, 94 Daily Journal DAR 2046.

Admission of a non-testifying coconspirator's confession in a robbery trial was prejudicial error where the jury necessarily had to believe the coconspirator's statements for conviction since the only evidence directly linking the defendant to the crime was the testimony of three civilian witnesses who claimed that defendant made statements to them admitting the crime. People v Scalerico (2d Dept) 140 App Div 2d 386, 527 NYS2d 567.

The trial court committed reversible error by admitting hearsay accusations of a defendant's alleged coconspirators where the prosecution proved no possession of drugs by the defendant, no statements made during negotiations by the defendant, and no other acts suggesting complicity in the sale of cocaine, and thus failed to establish an independent prima facie case as to defendant's membership in the conspiracy. People v Hernandez (1st Dept) 155 App Div 2d 342, 547 NYS2d 635, app den 75 NY2d 813, 552 NYS2d 563, 551 NE2d 1241.

Go to Supplement

In order for a coconspirator's hearsay statement to be admissible under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule, there must be a showing that a conspiracy existed. 25 Generally, the government must demonstrate by a preponderance of the evidence that a conspiracy existed. 26 Some courts provide that in order for statements to be admitted under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule, a prima facie case of conspiracy 27 or joint venture 28 must be established. According to some authority, the prima facie case must show that two or more persons were engaged in a common plan to accomplish a criminal goal or to reach a common end by criminal means. 29 A prima facie case of conspiracy is presented when the state introduces evidence which, if unrebutted, would be sufficient to establish the facts of the conspiracy. 30 Other courts state that the record must reveal sufficiently reliable evidence of a conspiracy for a coconspirator's declarations to be admissible. 31

Circumstantial evidence is sufficient to support a determination of the existence of a conspiracy. 32 Timing, circumstances, or one or more of a series of meetings may establish a conspiracy. 33 In some cases, the defendant's actions alone may be sufficient to establish a conspiracy. 34 Proof of the existence of a conspiracy is not limited to evidence which existed before the challenged declarations occurred and evidence of acts or conduct which by themselves are inadequate to support the admission of the statement, may, when considered together, support a finding of concert of action. 35

Some state courts hold that a defendant's mere knowledge of or acquiescence to an illegal act does not constitute a conspiracy for purposes of the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule; rather, there must be affirmative acts of agreement. 36 Some courts hold that, in criminal cases, the proponent of the evidence need only show a likelihood of an illicit association between the declarant and the defendant. 37

§ 848 ----Establishment of conspiracy [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Coconspirator's statements regarding both heroin and cocaine conspiracy were properly admitted against coconspirator charged only with cocaine conspiracy upon implicit finding that all were components of larger conspiracy. United States v Fisher (1993, CA1 Mass) 3 F3d 456, summary op at (CA1 Mass) 21 M.L.W. 3312.

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit murder for purpose of increasing defendants' position within criminal enterprise, evidence of murders that occurred during organized crime wars but did not involve defendants were properly admitted since they were direct proof of disputed fact regarding charged conspiracy, i.e., existence of violent internal war in organized crime family; evidence was not unduly prejudicial since existence of war was crucial to government's proof and there was no suggestion that defendants committed any of murders. United States v Brady (1994, CA2 NY) 26 F3d 282, cert den (1994, US) 115 S Ct 246.

Coconspirator's testimony relating to prior criminal act by defendant legitimately tended to prove nature of relationship between defendant and other coconspirators and was probative of conspiracy since, without it, defendant's "mere presence" defense would be much stronger; prejudicial effect was minimized by court's instruction that evidence be considered only on issue of trust and confidence between defendant and witness. United States v Araujo (1996, CA2 Conn) 79 F3d 7.

Evidence concerning fraudulent insurance claims that fell within time frame of alleged mail fraud conspiracy was admissible to prove involvement in charged conspiracy and not simply to prove similar acts, hence Rule 404(b) was not applicable. United States v Dozie (1994, CA4 NC) 27 F3d 95.

Coconspirator's statement was properly admitted where evidence established that both defendant and coconspirator were members of same drug conspiracy and statement was made during course of their drug dealing. United States v Perez (1994, CA7 Wis) 28 F3d 673.

Evidence of extortion defendant's participation in agreement with codefendant was sufficient to admit codefendant's out-of-court statement, to effect that defendant had hired him to damage some stores in Chicago and that one of the people involved was killed, as statement of coconspirator. United States v Sturman (1995, CA7 Ill) 49 F3d 1275.

Coconspirator's testimony that defendant delivered kilogram of cocaine base to her at beginning of March did not implicate Rule 404(b) because it tended to prove whether conspiracy to distribute cocaine existed until March 17, as charged, and therefore was inextricably intertwined with conspiracy charged so that its admission did not violate Rule's notice requirements. United States v Severe (1994, CA8 Minn) 29 F3d 444, reh den (1994, CA8 Minn) 1994 US App LEXIS 22019.

§ 849 Proof of participation by defendant and declarant in conspiracy

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Generally, the government must demonstrate by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant and the declarant were part of the conspiracy. 38 Although it is unnecessary to prove a formal or express agreement between conspirators, 39 or an overt act, 40 a party's mere presence or association with conspirators is insufficient to establish that party as a coconspirator. 41 However, the defendant need not be part of the conspiracy at the time the statements were made, 42 and the government need not prove that the defendant knew each and every detail of the conspiracy or played more than a minor role in the conspiracy. 43 It is enough to show an agreement between the defendant and the declarant and a statement in furtherance of their scheme. 44

Once a conspiracy has been established, some courts consider evidence of a slight connection to the conspiracy sufficient to link the party-opponent to the conspiracy for the purpose of admitting a coconspirator statement, 45 providing that the evidence be of a quality that will reasonably support a conclusion that the defendant willfully participated in the unlawful plan with the intent to further some object or purpose of the conspiracy. 46 Proof that the party-opponent was aware of the essential elements of the conspiracy, and with that knowledge joined the conspiracy, has also been required. 47

Circumstantial evidence is sufficient to support a determination of the defendant's participation in a conspiracy. 48 Proof of the party-opponent's connection to a conspiracy has been satisfied by evidence of electronic surveillance of conversations between alleged coconspirators which contain references by the alleged conspirators to their own cocaine dealings, 49 as well as by evidence of the party's willingness to provide a location for the consummation of an illegal transaction, participating also as an interpreter for those who could not speak the same language. 50 The timing and circumstances of a meeting or series of meetings, 51 may be sufficiently suspicious to permit a reasonable inference of a complicity in a criminal enterprise to support a finding of the existence and participation in a conspiracy for purposes of the Federal Rules of Evidence. In some cases, the defendant's actions alone may be sufficient to establish defendant's participation in a conspiracy. 52

◆ Observation: With respect to racketeering enterprises 53 it has been held that statements made during the course and in furtherance of the racketeering enterprise to which the party-opponent and declarant are members is sufficient to allow statements of the declarant to be admitted against the party-opponent, notwithstanding that the declarant and party-opponent were not shown to be members in the same smaller conspiracies that comprised the larger racketeering enterprise. 54

§ 849 ----Proof of participation by defendant and declarant in conspiracy [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Evidence of cocaine distribution conspirator's prior involvement in marijuana distribution conspiracy was properly admitted as highly probative of his intent to enter another drug conspiracy with same coconspirator and rebut his defense of innocent association. United States v Zackson (1993, CA2 NY) 12 F3d 1178.

Coconspirators' statements regarding loansharking were properly admitted; evidence that loansharking was principal activity of organized-crime family and that defendant was captain in family hierarchy established defendant's membership in conspiracy, and evidence established that declarant's were participants in family loansharking conspiracy. United States v Amato (1994, CA2 NY) 15 F3d 230.

Evidence of cocaine distribution defendant's contemporaneous distribution of marijuana was properly admitted as bearing on whether defendant intended to distribute other drugs in his possession. United States v Kills Enemy (1993, CA8 SD) 3 F3d 1201, reh, en banc, den (CA8) 1993 US App LEXIS 27048.

§ 850 Standard of proof

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Generally, when preliminary facts to admissibility of coconspirator testimony under the coconspirator hearsay exception are disputed, the proponent of the evidence must establish the preliminary facts required by a preponderance of the evidence before the coconspirator statements may be admitted. 55 This preponderance standard simply requires the prosecution to present sufficient proof so that the trial judge may find that the existence of the contested fact is more probable than its nonexistence. 56 However, some state courts have different standards for admitting such statements. For instance, some courts hold that a trial court can properly admit evidence of statements made in pursuance of a conspiracy if there is "some evidence" of a conspiracy or a sufficient offer of proof of its existence. 57 Other courts require sufficient, substantial and independent non-hearsay evidence of a conspiracy. 58 Although there is some authority to the contrary, 59 courts, following the preponderance of the evidence standard, state that the preponderance of the evidence standard governs the court's preliminary rulings in both civil and criminal cases. 60

Nevertheless, there is authority that, in determining the sufficiency of the evidence to establish a conspiracy, the evidence is considered in the light most favorable to the state. 61 In addition, despite some authority to the contrary, 62 some courts have stated that only slight evidence of a connection to a conspiracy is sufficient to support a finding that the declarant and party-opponent were conspirators. 63 However, in reference to such cases, it has been stated that the offering party must still meet the standard of a preponderance of the evidence, and that the reference to "slight evidence" refers to the nature and extent of the involvement in the conspiracy. 64

§ 850 ----Standard of proof [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Acquittal motions of defendants convicted of conspiracy were properly denied since jury's inferences from evidence that defendants were participants rather than innocent bystanders were eminently reasonable. United States v Mena- Robles (1993, CA1 Puerto Rico) 4 F3d 1026, summary op at (CA1 Puerto Rico) 22 M.L.W. 127, 14 R.I.L.W. 514 and petition for certiorari filed (Jan 18, 1994).

Government provided independent evidence to corroborate existence of conspiracy between defendant and coconspirator so as to admit coconspirator's statements to witness under coconspirator exception to hearsay rule; fact that witness's drug deal with coconspirator fell through immediately after latter spoke with defendant supported government's theory that coconspirator worked for defendant, defendant made statement to witness indicating that coconspirator worked for him, and police found sheet of paper with coconspirator's name and telephone number on it while searching defendant's house. United States v Neal (1996, CA4 SC) 78 F3d 901.

Court did not err in admitting into evidence taperecorded statements made by extortion defendant's alleged coconspirator since there was sufficient evidence of defendant's participation in conspiracy. United States v Blandford (1994, CA6 Ky) 33 F3d 685, 1994 FED App 312P, reh, en banc, den (1994, CA6 Ky) 1994 US App LEXIS 34101.

A coconspirator's out-of-court statement is not hearsay and is admissible against a defendant if the government demonstrates by a preponderance of the evidence that (1) a conspiracy existed; (2) the defendant and the declarant were part of the conspiracy; and (3) the declaration was made during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy. United States v Morgan (CA8 Mo) 997 F2d 433, reh den (CA8 Mo) 1993 US App LEXIS 19733.

For hearsay statements of a coconspirator to be admissible, a conspiracy must be shown by a preponderance of the evidence. People v Loy-Rafuls, 198 Mich App 594, 500 NW2d 480, revd on other grounds 442 Mich 912, 503 NW2d 453.

In order for a coconspirator statement to be admissible, there must be "independent and preponderant" evidence of a conspiracy between the declarant and the defendant. State v Madewell (Mo App) 846 SW2d 208.

The foundation required for the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule includes proof by a fair preponderance of the evidence that a conspiracy existed. Commonwealth v Stocker, 424 Pa Super 189, 622 A2d 333.

§ 851 Admissibility decided by judge

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Whether a coconspirator's statements have met the preliminary requirements for admission is a factual matter to be determined by the court ⁶⁵ in accord with the applicable rules of evidence. ⁶⁶ According to some courts, the trial judge must determine initially whether there is prima facie evidence that a conspiracy exists. ⁶⁷ The trial judge is permitted to weigh and evaluate the credibility of the witnesses and other evidence in rendering a determination on compliance with the prerequisites for admission, ⁶⁸ and the judge's decision is conclusive so that the jury may not reexamine the question of whether there is enough evidence of the defendant's participation to allow hearsay to be used. ⁶⁹ It has been found appropriate to rule on the issue of compliance with the prerequisites for admission at the close of all the evidence. ⁷⁰ In civil cases, a preliminary determination of admissibility may be made before the close of all the evidence, providing the proponent of the coconspirator statement has been given a fair and reasonable opportunity to present evidence of a conspiracy and the declarant's participation in it. ⁷¹ The judge need not hold a hearing outside the presence of the jury to develop evidence of the alleged conspiracy before admitting any coconspirator's statements. ⁷²

◆ Caution: Although it may be argued that any written statement by a coconspirator in the furtherance of a conspiracy may be subject to pretrial discovery under the Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure pertaining to disclosure of evidence by the government, ⁷³ criminal defendants are not entitled to pretrial discovery of coconspirator's statements under the subsection pertaining to disclosure of statements made by a defendant, ⁷⁴

notwithstanding that defendants could be held vicariously liable for such statements as if they were their own admissions. 75 Similarly, the Jencks Act, 76 which prohibits compelled disclosure of oral statements of a government witness before that witness testifies, governs the pretrial release of any inculpatory oral statements of coconspirators who are prospective government witnesses, 77 and statements of a coconspirator need not be disclosed if the coconspirator has not yet testified. 78

§ 851 ----Admissibility decided by judge [SUPPLEMENT]

Rules:

(FRCrP, Rule 16), amended in 1994, clarifies the rule's applicability to organizational as well as individual defendants.

Case authorities:

District court did not abuse its discretion in failing to make more specific findings on admissibility of coconspirators' statements where defendants did not object when district court, prompted by government to need for finding which it had delayed after admitting evidence, said there was clearly no problem with the government's having met its burden of proof of admissibility, government's burden was clearly met, and defendant's did not cite specific coconspirator statements to which they objected on appeal. United States v Moss (1993, CA6 Mich) 9 F3d 543, reh, en banc, den (CA6) 1994 US App LEXIS 1612.

Court did not err in questioning alleged unindicted coconspirator in jury's presence to satisfy itself that requirements for admission of coconspirator's statements; court's questioning was prompted by defense objections to government's attempts to elicit hearsay statements from witness. United States v Pedigo (1994, CA7 Ill) 12 F3d 618.

District court's use of written proffer rather than full blown pretrial hearing on issue of admissibility of coconspirator statements was not abuse of discretion. United States v Vargas (1994, CA7 Ind) 16 F3d 155.

Trial court's failure to make all required findings for admissibility of coconspirators' statements constituted reversible error since coconspirator hearsay testimony was most damaging and probative evidence offered by government against defendant. United States v Rascon (1993, CA10 NM) 8 F3d 1537, 38 Fed Rules Evid Serv 364.

§ 852 --Articulation of findings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

There is authority that, at the close of all the evidence, the court must make an explicit, on-the-record finding on the admissibility of the coconspirator statements before the case is submitted to the jury, 79 at least when requested by appropriate motion. 80 Where no motion is made, it has sometimes been held that explicit findings regarding the prerequisites for admission are not required. 81 It is appropriate for the court to make the ruling on the record, but out of the jury's presence. 82

◆ Observation: Some courts make a distinction between findings in jury trials as opposed to bench trials. Such courts hold that, in a jury trial, failure to make findings that the standards of the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule have been met constitutes reversible error, regardless of whether the defendant requested such findings. 83 However, in bench trials, while the rule on admissibility remains unchanged, the court requires explicit findings only when the defendant makes a specific request for them. 84

◆ Caution: A motion for acquittal and a renewal of all previous evidentiary objections is not by itself a sufficiently specific request to alert the court to the need for additional specific findings as to whether the prerequisites for admission have been satisfied by a preponderance of the evidence. 85 And a party cannot later complain that the court improperly determined compliance with the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule by ruling at the close of the offering party's evidence and not at the conclusion of all the evidence if there is no motion for a specific ruling. 86

In the absence of explicit findings by the trial court regarding the prerequisites for the admission of coconspirator statements, the necessary threshold determination for admissibility has been held implicit in the court's decision to send the case to the jury. 87 Where the record indicates careful consideration of the court's responsibility under the coconspirator exception, it may be implied that the necessary threshold determination for admissibility has been made at the close of all the evidence, when the court explicitly determines that the evidence presented was sufficient to let the case against all the defendants go to the jury. 88 The court's failure to make a specific finding of admissibility of coconspirator statements has been held harmless error, where the record demonstrates there was sufficient evidence that qualified the statements as "not hearsay" under coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule. 89 Moreover, it does not constitute reversible error when the trial judge announces an intention to subsequently rule on the admissibility of the coconspirator statements and then fails to articulate specific findings or conclusions on the issue, where the record indicates careful consideration was given to the matter, since the failure to articulate findings does not necessarily mean the issue was never decided. 90

The court is not required to articulate specific facts and reasons in support of a ruling on the admission of coconspirator statements, 91 at least where the court indicates there was sufficient and substantial evidence of the preliminary facts. 92 Although specific findings as to each party with respect to participation in the alleged conspiracy are preferred, the failure to make such a finding does not necessarily preclude admissibility, 93 as the requisite finding of participation in the alleged conspiracy may be implied from the admission of the coconspirator statement and a denial of the party's motion for acquittal on the conspiracy charge. 94 Moreover, a general ruling that the party-opponents were members of the alleged conspiracy combined with the receipt into evidence of the coconspirator statements may be a sufficient determination that the prerequisites for admission have been satisfied, where there is substantial evidence linking the parties to the conspiracy. 95

§ 853 --Jury instructions

View Entire Section

Since it is the court's role to determine the admissibility of coconspirator statements, 96 the jury is not to be instructed about the admissibility of statements of coconspirators. 97

Although it has been held that an interim instruction on the coconspirator exception is appropriate to prepare the jury for the possibility that upcoming testimony disclosing coconspirator statements may be subsequently stricken from the record, 98 such an instruction is said to run the risk of alerting the jury that the judge will determine that a conspiracy involving the defendant has been proven by a preponderance of the evidence. 99

◆ Practice guide: It has been suggested that when the declaration of a coconspirator is to be offered, requiring the need for a judicial determination of admissibility under the Federal Rules of Evidence coconspirator hearsay exception 1 the court may be so advised in the presence of the jury by using technical terms which only the judge and counsel will understand to avoid alerting the jury. 2

§ 854 Order of proof

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The control of the order of proof is a matter committed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and some courts state that the trial court has considerable discretion with respect to the order of proof. ³ A problem arises because the preliminary questions regarding the admission of coconspirator statements often coincide with the ultimate issue in many conspiracy prosecutions. ⁴ The court must avoid invading the jury's province to determine the ultimate issue of conspiracy and avoid prejudicing the defendant by the admission of coconspirator statements that are subsequently withdrawn when the existence of a conspiracy is not proven to the court's satisfaction. ⁵

Taking the view that the remedy of a curative instruction or a mistrial is either inadequate or too costly, some courts have set out a preferred order of proof, under which the government is to make a sufficient showing of a conspiracy and the defendant's participation in it before seeking the admission of statements of a coconspirator. ⁶ To satisfy this interim stage, some courts require the proponent of the coconspirator statements to produce substantial evidence of the existence of a conspiracy and the participation in it of the declarant and party-opponent. 7 Some courts, recognizing that requiring the offering party to demonstrate the existence of a conspiracy and the participation in it by the declarant and the party against whom the statement is offered is not always reasonably practical, permit coconspirator statements to be provisionally admitted, subject to eventual proof of the conspiracy and the defendant's participation in it, 8 as well as proof that the statements were made in the course of and in furtherance of the conspiracy. 9 Thus, some courts say that a coconspirator's statement may be admitted before the establishment of a prima facie case of conspiracy conditioned upon a subsequent showing of conspiracy before the close of the state's evidence. 10 Conditional admission of coconspirator statements has been found appropriate where——the segmentation of the hearsay testimony from the surrounding circumstances and the removal of statements from context would cause confusion and needless repetition of testimony. 11

—the trials of the alleged conspirators were severed, leaving each trial with two absent conspirators and an order of proof problem. 12

—the out-of-court declarations constituted the prosecution's case in chief and without such evidence it was unlikely the defendants could be convicted. 13

◆ Caution: When coconspirator statements are admitted provisionally subject to a later motion to strike, the failure to timely move that the testimony be stricken may be considered a waiver of objections to the testimony. 14

If the prosecution fails to subsequently offer sufficient evidence after a provisional admission of coconspirator statements, the statements may be stricken from the record, 15 with appropriate limiting instructions to the jury, 16 and in some cases a mistrial may be warranted. 17

The court's discretion in controlling the order of proof may be broader where the party seeks to introduce coconspirators' statements in a civil action. 18

Conviction of a corporation and several of the corporation's employees was reversed and a new trial ordered in a conspiracy action arising from the alleged conversion of grain owned or pledged to a government agency, since cautionary jury instructions were inadequate to cure the prejudice caused by the admission of certain declarations which the prosecution failed to prove by subsequent evidence were made by coconspirators, where the defense claimed that the grain transfer was an isolated and unintentional occurrence, and the hearsay testimony consisted of a declaration during an executive meeting by corporate counsel who stated the grain shipments violated federal law and the declaration of another corporate employee expressing an opinion that the grain shipments were illegal and that the use of grain belonging to others was a routine practice in the industry. United States v American Grain & Related Industries (CA8 Iowa) 763 F2d 312, 18 Fed Rules Evid Serv 730.

§ 855 --Pretrial hearings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Although there is some authority to the contrary, 19 pretrial hearings may be held to determine whether anticipated testimony and evidence will comply with the preliminary requirements for admission as coconspirator statements. 20 There is authority that there is no requirement that the trial court hold a pretrial hearing to determine the admissibility of coconspirator statements, although such hearings are acceptable. 21 Despite a pretrial hearing, the party-opponent may still move for reconsideration of the determination at the close of all the trial evidence. 22 Pretrial hearings have been held in instances, when——the evidence to establish the conspiracy is voluminous. 23

—the evidence being offered against the party consists primarily of out-of-court declarations by coconspirators, 24 although pretrial hearings have also been denied because the burden imposed on the prosecution in trying to prove a conspiracy without the use of the out-of-court declarations was greater than any potential prejudice due to inadmissible hearsay. 25

—the statements being offered are by individuals who were former conspirators before becoming informants, making it necessary to separate the statements made when the declarants were conspirators, and those made when the declarants became informants and thus inadmissible under the Federal Rule of Evidence coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule. 26

—out-of-court declarations by a party's defense counsel are sought to be admitted. 27

Although a recognized option, pretrial hearings are not constitutionally mandated, and the trial court may properly determine that such a hearing is unnecessary. 28 The determination of the admissibility of coconspirator statements is one that some courts consider can be generally handled competently in the context of a trial. 29 In deciding to forgo a pretrial hearing on the admissibility of coconspirator statements, the court is not required to make a finding that such a hearing would be impractical. 30 Requests for a pretrial hearing regarding the admission of coconspirator statements have been denied when such a hearing would be lengthy 31 or would result in a mini-trial. 32

It has been held that the Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure pertaining to the defendant's presence at certain proceedings 33 does not convey upon a criminal defendant the right to be present throughout the taking of testimony at a pretrial hearing for the determination of the admissibility of coconspirator statements under the Federal Rules of Evidence, 34 and that the absence of the defendant from the hearing does not violate the defendant's rights under the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment of the Constitution. 35

§ 856 Standard of review of evidence

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

On appeal, the court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to upholding the trial court's decision. 36 The court's determination regarding compliance with the prerequisites for admission under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule will not be disturbed on appeal unless the court's exercise of discretion is clearly erroneous. 37 Some courts state that the trial court's decision will not be disturbed so long as there is sufficient evidence to permit the trial court to reasonably infer that there existed a conspiracy. 38 In addition, even if the prerequisites are not satisfied and the coconspirator statements are improperly admitted against the nonoffering parties, the court may still consider the admission a harmless error upon review of the other evidence, 39 particularly where there is overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt. 40 However, it is possible that an appellate court will remand an action for an explicit finding as to compliance with the preliminary facts needed for the admission of coconspirator statements under the Federal Rule of Evidence coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule 41 where the trial court has failed to make the requisite finding in admitting such evidence, instead of reversing the judgment due to the judge's failure to make a determination of admissibility in a situation where it would be considered a reversible error if there was insufficient evidence of the preliminary facts. 42

◆ Caution: Although the introduction of inadmissible hearsay may constitute harmless error because the evidence is cumulative to other evidence properly admitted, it does not automatically mean that the error is harmless regarding the constitutional right to confrontation of witnesses nor does it mean that the inadmissible hearsay automatically assumes constitutional proportions. 43

§ 856 ----Standard of review of evidence [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Substantial evidence showed that defendants were members of cocaine distribution conspiracy; therefore, coconspirator's statements about their role in conspiracy were properly admitted under coconspirator exception to hearsay rule; one witness testified that one defendant was declarant's right-hand man, member of special group which developed around declarant when another gang that distributed cocaine began losing strength, and that two defendants delivered drugs and picked up money for declarant, and other witnesses testified that third defendant participated in drug transactions connected to declarant. United States v Stephenson (1995, CA7 Ill) 53 F3d 836.

There was no prejudicial error in a prosecution for murder and multiple assaults where the trial court admitted testimony from one witness that two of the victims had come to her door with one of them saying "Tari has assassinated Tyrone" and testimony from another witness that the same victim had awakened him in the early morning hours and told him that "[H]e was running away from the scene of the shooting, as he was running away, he could see out of the corner of his eye. [Defendants] was shooting, both of them." Assuming that these out-of-court statements were inadmissible hearsay because they went so far beyond the witness' in-court testimony as not to be corroborative, there was no prejudice because the other evidence established clearly and overwhelmingly that either defendant Cureton or defendant Abraham, acting in concert with the other, shot and killed one victim as he attempted to flee. There is no possibility that a different result would have occurred at trial had the complained-of evidence not been admitted. State v Abraham (1994) 338 NC 315, 451 SE2d 131.

§ 857 Mental or physical condition

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Where there is evidence to show that a person making an admission was at the time in such a mental or physical condition as not to be able to recollect and to voluntarily state the facts, the probative value and weight of the admission is for the trier of fact. 44 Admissions of an insane person may be shown for what they are worth, although they are not binding on the declarant. 45 However, it has also been held that a statement made by a person of unsound mind should be rejected when offered in evidence against such person for any purpose other than to show that he or she is insane. 46

Statements which are pre-incapacitation admissions of a plaintiff may be properly admitted. 47

§ 858 --Injury

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A number of jurisdictions have enacted statutes which limit the admissibility or effect of statements given or made by an injured party near the time of the injury, when offered in evidence against such party in an action based upon the party's injuries. 48 "Injured party," for purposes of some statutes, may not include the defendant in an action, even though the defendant was injured in an action which was the basis of the suit. 49 Such statutes may only apply to actions to recover damages for personal injuries and not in actions to recover property damage. 50 However, such statutes have been held to extend to statements given by an injured person of his or her own accord, and not merely to one given at the request of the other party. 51 Nevertheless, statements made to an investigating officer at the scene of an accident may not be excluded since the statute is not applicable to police officers who lack an interest in the outcome of the case. 52

Under such statutes, an ex parte statement, voluntarily made by an injured party, cannot be used even if the injured party's adversary might be dependent upon it to establish nonliability. 53 The purpose of such statutes is to protect claimants against the extortion of damaging admissions, by defendants or their representatives, the statutes do not affect statements which are shown to have been made voluntarily to persons other than the defendants or their agents. 54

§ 859 Infancy

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Generally, although a child who does not understand the obligation of an oath may be excluded from testifying in court, when a child becomes a party to a suit, the same kinds of evidence, including admissions and declarations, are received against the child as are received against an adult, 55 subject to the limitation that his or her admissions cannot be given the effect of imposing a contractual liability upon him or her which the law permits an infant to avoid. 56 In addition, in a number of cases, it has been held that a child's out-of-court admissions against interest are admissible. 57 However, some cases hold that only a minor who has reached the age of discretion can make an admission against interest. 58

Nevertheless, the admissions and declarations of a child are to be received with caution, and the weight and effect of such admissions and declarations are to be determined by the trier of fact, after due consideration of the child's age and understanding and all the facts and circumstances in the case. 59

Although some authorities seem to favor applying the same criteria to the admissibility of a declaration of a child as those which apply to his or her testimonial qualifications as a witness, this does not necessarily mean that disqualification to testify is fatal to the admissibility of the declaration. 60 It is one thing for the child-declarant to have had the capacity to make a trustworthy statement about something he or she had just experienced or seen occur, and another to be able to testify reliably in court as a witness as to what occurred a number of years previously, to withstand cross-examination thereon, and to appreciate the obligation of an oath. 61 In each case admissibility is for the sound discretionary judgment of the trial court. 62

§ 860 Res gestae, generally; definition

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Broadly speaking, the term "res gestae"—from the Latin meaning "things done"—includes circumstances, facts, and declarations incidental to the main fact or transaction, and necessary to illustrate its character, and acts, words, and declarations which are so closely connected to the main fact or transaction as to constitute a part of it. 63 As defined by a state statute, res gestae declarations have been characterized as those declarations accompanying an act, or so nearly connected in time to such act as to be free from all suspicion of device or afterthought. The term "res gestae" refers to declarations which (1) obviously spring out of the transaction; (2) tend to elucidate it; (3) are not suspected or extracted and thus are spontaneous and voluntary; and (4) are made at a time and under circumstances precluding any suggestion of deliberate design. 64

There are two separate and distinguishable contexts in which the term res gestae is used to refer to admissible evidence. 65 Frequently, the term res gestae refers to excited utterances or other spontaneous statements excepted from the rule against hearsay. 66 Apart from spontaneous statements, the term also is applied to statements and acts contemporaneous with an incident in question. 67 Contemporaneous res gestae statements of this type are not hearsay because they are not offered to prove the truth of the assertions contained therein, but rather for the purpose of completing the story of the incident and its immediate context. 68

While the concepts that traditionally were labeled as res gestae are still present in the law of evidence, the phrase itself is no longer recognized in many jurisdictions; 69 statements and acts formerly admitted under the res gestae doctrine are now described and rendered admissible by separate specific evidence rules. 70

The "res gestae exception" to the hearsay rule has become a collective reference to a number of separately identifiable exceptions, the common denominator of which is that the declarant uttered the statement spontaneously and without deliberation. Jones v Commonwealth, 11 Va App 75, 396 SE2d 844.

§ 861 --As exception to hearsay rule

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The doctrine of res gestae, although abandoned by the legislatures and courts of many states, 71 retains vitality in a few states as a theory for the introduction of otherwise inadmissible hearsay. 72 Where still applicable, res gestae, as an exception to the hearsay rule, refers to spontaneous or excited utterances. 73 Under modern law, there are at least four distinct exceptions to the hearsay rule encompassed by the term "res gestae": (1) declarations of present bodily condition, including statements made to physicians; (2) declarations of present mental state and emotion; 74 (3) excited utterances; 75 and (4) declarations of present sense impressions. 76 Nevertheless, some courts continue to refer to the "res gestae exception," sometimes without explaining which of the distinct exceptions in question is meant, and other times using the term interchangeably with the excited utterance exception. 77 Some courts have declared that the term "res gestae" should be eliminated from the language of the law of evidence because it is no longer useful and tends only to confuse the reasoning with respect to why a given hearsay statement should be admissible. 78

The Federal Rules of Evidence, upon which many states have patterned their rules of evidence, make no mention of res gestae, 79 but do contain hearsay exceptions for statements of present sense impression, 80 excited utterances, 81 statements of present mental or physical condition, 82 and statements for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment. 83

§ 862 --As theory permitting introduction of incidental or contemporaneous acts, circumstances, and statements

Although the term "res gestae" has fallen out of favor as a password for the admittance of hearsay testimony, 84 it retains validity in many states as a term describing acts and circumstances admitted into evidence because of their ability to shed light on a principal fact at issue, usually the commission of a crime. 85 In this regard, separate and apart from excited utterances, 86 the term "res gestae" has also been applied to statements and conduct contemporaneous with an incident in question. 87 For example, the motive, character, and object of an act are frequently indicated by what was said by the person engaged in the act, and such statements—also known as "verbal acts"—are admissible in evidence with the remainder of the transaction which they illustrate. 88

Contemporaneous res gestae statements of this type are not hearsay because they are not offered to prove the truth of the assertions contained therein, but rather for the purpose of completing the story of the incident and its immediate context. 89 Thus, under the doctrine of res gestae, the prosecution is allowed sufficient latitude to elicit relevant testimony of the facts and circumstances surrounding a charged offense. 90 Acts performed before, 91 during, 92 or after the principal event may be admitted as part of the res gestae. 93

The typical objection to the introduction of evidence of incidental acts and circumstances is that it violates the prohibition on introducing evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts to prove the character of a person, in order to show that such person later acted in conformity therewith. 94 In many jurisdictions, however, evidence of other crimes, wrongs or "bad acts" of an accused is admissible when such evidence is introduced as part of the res gestae of the crime, despite the fact that it may incidentally suggest that the accused acted in conformity with his prior crimes or wrongs. 95 This exception, known variously as the "same transaction" rule, the "complete story" exception, and the "course of conduct" exception, 96 exists to help the factfinder understand the context in which the alleged crime occurred. 97 Thus, for example, evidence of the use of force, threats, and assaults occurring contemporaneously with the charged crime of kidnapping is part of the res gestae of the offense of kidnapping and is admissible as evidence against an accused. 98 Similarly, evidence that a fight was about to occur at the time of the defendant's arrest for possession of metallic knuckles is properly admitted as part of the res gestae of the charged offense. 99 And where evidence of an accused's marijuana possession serves the purpose of establishing the chain of circumstances leading up to his arrest for possession of LSD, such evidence is admissible because it is probative of more than just the accused's propensity to possess illegal drugs. 1

Evidence of other crimes may be admissible under Rule 404(b) of the Federal Rules of Evidence, which rule prohibits the introduction of evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts to prove the character of a person in order to show action in conformity therewith, where such evidence explains the circumstances of the crime charged. United States v Petary (CA8 Iowa) 857 F2d 458, 26 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1090.

The prohibition on the admission of evidence of other crimes is not intended to prohibit the state from introducing evidence of similar transactions or occurrences which are immediately related in time and place to the charge being tried, as part of a single, continuous transaction. Thus, testimony was admissible where it implicated appellants, who were charged with the crime of hindering the apprehension of a fugitive, in a robbery committed by the fugitive after he had escaped from jail, inasmuch as the entire course of the appellants' dealings with the fugitive after his escape from jail was a necessary part of the res gestae showing that they had frequent contact with the fugitive, and that their time was spent protecting the fugitive and shielding him from the public and the authorities. Owen v State, 202 Ga App 833, 415 SE2d 537, 103-42 Fulton County D R 24.

Evidence of other crimes or wrongs is admissible if it forms part of the history of the event or serves to enhance the natural development of the facts. State v Agee, 326 NC 542, 391 SE2d 171; Commonwealth v Marshall, 523 Pa 556, 568 A2d 590.

§ 863 "Verbal acts"

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The motive, character, and object of an act are frequently indicated by what was said by the person engaged in the act, and such statements—also known as "verbal acts"—are admissible in evidence with the remainder of the transaction which they illustrate. ² For utterances to be admissible as verbal acts, (1) the conduct to be characterized by the words must be independently material to the issue; (2) the conduct must be equivocal; (3) the words must aid in giving legal significance to the conduct; and (4) the words must accompany the conduct. ³

The purpose of admitting a verbal act or fact is to prove the nature of an act, rather than to prove the truth of any alleged statement. ⁴ Thus, contemporaneous words that characterize ambiguous nonverbal conduct generally are considered not hearsay, rather than as hearsay for which an exception is made. ⁵

Under the verbal act doctrine, utterances are never regarded as verbal acts unless they accompany the conduct to which some legal effect is sought to be attached. ⁶

If the significance of an offered statement lies solely in the fact that it was made, no issue is raised as to the truth of anything asserted, and the statement is not hearsay. § 864 Statements of present sense impression

View Entire Section

In many jurisdictions, a statement describing or explaining an event or condition made while the declarant was perceiving the event or condition, or immediately thereafter, is not excluded by the rule against hearsay evidence, 7 and is thus admissible to prove the truth of the statement. 8 In this regard, while the Federal Rules of Evidence, upon which many states have patterned their rules of evidence, make no mention of res gestae, 9 they do contain a hearsay exception for statements of present sense impression. 10

The theory underlying this exception to the hearsay rule is that since a statement of present sense impression is made at the same time as the event being described, there is neither a memory problem nor time for a calculated misstatement. 11 Present sense impression statements are considered reliable because: (1) they refer to observations being made at the time of the statement and are free from any defect of the memory; (2) they are made contemporaneous with the observation and there is little or no time for calculated misstatement; (3) they are made to a third person who will probably have an opportunity to observe the situation and provide a check on the accuracy of the declarant's statement; and (4) since the declarant will often be available for cross-examination his credibility will be subject to substantial verification before the trier of fact. 12

For a statement of a present sense impression to be admissible against a hearsay objection, the declarant must have perceived the event described by the statement, the statement must describe or explain the event, and the statement must be substantially contemporaneous with the event. 13 Some jurisdictions, as a further guaranty of reliability, and despite any such specific requirement in the applicable Federal Rule of Evidence, 14 require that the statement describing or explaining the event be "spontaneous," 15 or that the declarant make the observation about the perceived event to another person also present at the scene, for purposes of corroboration. 16 However, some courts have rejected the contention that corroboration by an equally percipient witness is invariably required as a condition to the admissibility of a statement of present sense impression. 17 Nevertheless, extrinsic evidence sometimes may be required to demonstrate the contemporaneity of the statement and the event, or to show that the statement is the product of personal perception of the declarant. 18 Even when not required for admissibility, corroboration, or the lack thereof, may be important in determining the weight to be given the statement. 19

If an utterance is concurrent with the force or action that immediately results in one's injury or damage, and is so made that it derives testimonial credit from the attention of the speaker to what is happening, it is admissible as a present sense impression. 20

§ 865 Excited utterances

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Hearsay statements relating to a startling event or condition made while the declarant was under the stress of excitement caused by the event or condition—that is, "excited utterances"—are ordinarily admissible in evidence. 21 In this regard, the Federal Rules of Evidence contain a hearsay exception for excited utterances. 22 To come within the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, a statement must be a spontaneous declaration by a person whose mind has been suddenly made subject to an overpowering emotion caused by some unexpected and shocking occurrence, which that person had just participated in or closely witnessed, and made in reference to some phase of that occurrence which he perceived. 23

The basis for the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule is that the perceived event produces nervous excitement, making fabrication of statements about that event unlikely. 24 Since an excited utterance is made under the immediate and uncontrolled domination of the senses, rather than reason and reflection, and during the brief period when consideration of self-interest cannot be fully brought to bear, the utterance may be taken as expressing the real belief of the speaker as to the facts just observed by him. 25

Whether a statement fits within the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule is to be determined on the facts of the particular case. 26 The exception applies only if (1) a startling event or condition occurred; (2) the statement was made while the declarant was under the stress of excitement caused by the event or condition; 27 and (3) the statement relates to the startling event or condition. 28 Generally, the sufficiency of the event or occurrence to qualify as the startling event is not questioned. 29 The primary consideration for the trial court is whether the utterance is, because of the circumstances, reliable. 30 However, courts have not attempted to confine the application of the excited utterance exception solely to indisputably reliable statements. 31 Courts look primarily to the effect of a particular event upon the declarant, and, if satisfied that the event was such as to cause adequate excitement, the inquiry is ended. 32

◆ Observation: A spontaneous statement of opinion or conclusion is inadmissible even where the statement as a whole meets the requirements of the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. 33

Case authorities:

Inmate's statement to guard identifying defendant as assailant of other inmate was admissible as excited utterance since inmate, while seeking assistance for injured inmate who was bleeding badly from deep 7-inch wound and following defendant who fled scene, blurted out obscenity identifying defendant upon seeing guard. United States v Moses (1994, CA8 Minn) 15 F3d 774, cert den (US) 62 USLW 3826.

Rape victim's statements to her mother were properly admitted under excited utterance exception to hearsay rule even though they were made at least 30 minutes after alleged rape, where victim was only 15 while defendant was 45, during assault victim had been subjected to physical abuse and death threats made against her and her family, she made statement immediately after she returned to her mother, mother testified that victim was crying and in semi-hysterical state at time she made statements, and statements concerned ordeal victim had just experienced. United States v Rivera (1995, CA9 Mont) 43 F3d 1291, 95 CDOS 56, 95 Daily Journal DAR 154.

Trial court did not err in admitting, as excited utterance, mother's testimony that, on morning after evening during which defendant visited house, 5- year-old daughter told mother that defendant sexually assaulted girl, where communication occurred on first occasion that girl saw adult after alleged assault. Greenlee v State (1994) 318 Ark 191, 884 SW2d 947.

In prosecution for third degree weapon possession, court erred in allowing police officers to testify that, prior to approaching defendant, they had been informed by certain individual that man dressed in brown clothing had "just pulled a gun"; such statement did not fall within "excited utterance" exception to hearsay rule. People v Furtado (1992, 2d Dept) 182 AD2d 637, 581 NYS2d 871.

Victim's statements to girlfriend and police officer, identifying defendant as his assailant, were properly admitted as excited utterances where (1) his statement to girlfriend was made minutes after being shot in stomach, and while he was bleeding, breathing heavily, perspiring, weak, dizzy, and expressing desire to go to hospital, and (2) he was still under continuing stress and excitement of shooting at time he made statement to officer 30 minutes later. People v Evans (1992, 2d Dept) 183 AD2d 780, 583 NYS2d 510, app den 80 NY2d 895, 587 NYS2d 925, 600 NE2d 652.

Testimony by an assault victim that defendants' companion yelled "shoot the mother f—er" just before defendants drew their guns and began shooting was not inadmissible hearsay since the testimony was admitted to establish why defendants began shooting and to show the context in which the shooting began. Even if the statement was hearsay, it was admissible under the "excited utterance" exception to the hearsay rule where it was made when someone with whom the companion had been arguing came toward him holding a bar chair in the air. State v Reid (1994) 335 NC 647, 440 SE2d 776.

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder sentencing hearing by allowing the victim's mother-in- law to testify that on the morning of the murder she went to the victim's home, where the victim's two-and-a-half-year-old daughter came to the door and said, "Mama is asleep. Mama is dead." The statement by the daughter was made a few hours after the murder, she had been through a startling experience which suspended reflective thought, and her statement was a spontaneous reaction not resulting from fabrication. It was an excited utterance and was admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 803(2). State v Reeves (1994) 337 NC 700, 448 SE2d 802.

An exculpatory statement about the shooting of the victim made by defendant to the aunt with whom he lived was not admissible as an excited utterance and was properly excluded as hearsay in this first-degree murder trial where defendant first talked with his aunt on the telephone after the shooting from his grandmother's house but did not mention the shooting, and defendant waited until he went to his aunt's home an hour after the shooting to tell her what had happened, since defendant had time to manufacture the statement and the statement lacked spontaneity. G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 803(2). State v Sidberry (1994) 337 NC 779, 448 SE2d 798.

Defendant's statement to his girlfriend, when she told him she had heard he had shot someone, that he had shot a gun but had not shot anyone was not admissible under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule set forth in G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 803(2) since the girlfriend's comment to defendant was not a sufficiently startling event, and defendant's response cannot be considered spontaneous because the statement was made five hours after the shooting, and defendant had ample time for reflection and preparation for any confrontation regarding his prior activities. State v Jackson (1995) 340 NC 301, 457 SE2d 862.

Statements made by a homicide victim and a rescue squad member were admissible under the excited utterances exception to the hearsay rule. G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 803(2) State v Littlejohn (1995) 340 NC 750, 459 SE2d 629.

The basis for the excited utterance exception is that such statements are given under circumstances that eliminate the possibility of fabrication, coaching, or confabulation, and that therefore the circumstances surrounding the making of the statement provide sufficient assurance that the statement is trustworthy and that cross-examination would be superfluous. Idaho v Wright, 497 US 805, 111 L Ed 2d 638, 110 S Ct 3139, 30 Fed Rules Evid Serv 24.

For the purpose of the "spontaneous utterance" exception to the hearsay rule, an utterance is spontaneous if it is made under the influence of an exciting event and before the declarant has had time to contrive or fabricate the remark. § 866 Statements of present mental, emotional, or physical condition

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Statements that shed light upon the declarant's then-existing mental, emotional, or physical condition typically are admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule, and may be offered to prove the declarant's condition, his subsequent conduct, or his intent, plan, or motive at the time the statement was made. 34 Thus, for example, the Federal Rules of Evidence, upon which many states have patterned their rules of evidence, contain a hearsay exception for statements of present mental or physical condition. 35 Statements of memory or belief to prove the fact remembered or believed are not covered by the hearsay exception for statements of present mental or physical condition, 36 although in some jurisdictions, statements of memory or belief that relate to the execution, revocation, identification, or terms of the declarant's will are admissible under the state-of-mind exception. 37

Evidence tending to show a presently existing state of mind is admissible only if the state of mind sought to be proved is relevant 38 and the prejudicial effect of the evidence does not outweigh its probative value. 39 Thus, for example, a victim's hearsay statements of fear of an accused are admissible under the hearsay exception for statements of present mental condition only when the victim's conduct in conformity with that fear is in dispute. 40

When a declarant's intent is directly in issue, the declarant's statements relative to his then-existing intention are admitted without question. 41 Some courts have extended the state-of-mind exception to admit hearsay statements of a declarant's future intent to perform an act with another person as circumstantial proof that the act did occur 42 and, by necessary implication, that the other person participated in the act. 43

◆ Observation: Statements of present mental condition are not admissible to show the state of mind of someone other than the declarant. 44

◆ Comment: Although it is true that some details accompanying a statement of one's state of mind may be inadmissible, "details" per se are not excluded under the hearsay exception for statements of present mental condition. 45

§ 866 ----Statements of present mental, emotional, or physical condition [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder resentencing hearing by admitting hearsay statements of the victim relating to her state of mind. State v Spruill (1994) 338 NC 612, 452 SE2d 279.

The diary of a murder victim was not admissible under the state- of-mind hearsay exception in the noncapital first-degree murder prosecution of her husband where the diary described an incident in which defendant had hit and slapped the victim, thrown water, dishes, ashtrays, and paper at her, and screamed that he was going to kill her. The statements in the diary are not statements of the victim's state of mind, but are merely a recitation of facts. Mere statements of fact are provable by other means and are not inherently trustworthy. Moreover, the diary is at best speculative as to the victim's state of mind and contains indications that she was not intimidated by defendant. State v Hardy (1994) 339 NC 207, 451 SE2d 600.

The trial court did not err in a noncapital first-degree murder prosecution by admitting testimony that the victim, a practical nurse, had told a person at whose house she worked that defendant was the father of her child and that she feared for her life if she went to court to obtain child support from defendant. The scope of the conversation related directly to the victim's state of mind and emotional condition, the victim's state of mind was relevant as it related directly to circumstances giving rise to a potential confrontation with defendant on the day she was murdered, and the probative value of this evidence was not outweighed by unfair prejudice. N.C.G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 803(3). State v Corbett (1994) 339 NC 313, 451 SE2d 252.

In an action to have a deed declared void on the ground that it was obtained by undue influence, statements made by plaintiff, who was deceased at the time of trial, were not inadmissible hearsay, since evidence of declarations of the testator which disclosed his state of mind at the time of the execution of the paper writing on the circumstances under which it was executed, tending to show that he did or did not act freely and voluntarily, is competent as substantive proof of undue influence, and all the challenged testimony here concerned plaintiff's state of mind regarding defendant and tended to show that plaintiff did not freely and voluntarily deed the remainder interest in the property to defendant. Caudill v Smith (1994) 117 NC App 64, 450 SE2d 8, review den (NC) 1995 NC LEXIS 75.

The trial court in a murder prosecution did not err in admitting testimony of the victim's brother concerning a question asked of defendant by the victim at the beginning of their altercation as to why defendant had recently pulled a gun on him, since this hearsay statement was properly admitted pursuant to N.C.G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 803(3), which deals with a statement of the declarant's then existing state of mind, emotion, sensation, or physical condition. State v Nixon (1994) 117 NC App 141, 450 SE2d 562.

§ 867 Statements for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

An exception to the hearsay rule is commonly made for statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment, including, where pertinent to diagnosis or treatment, statements describing (1) medical history; (2) past or present symptoms, pain, or sensations; and (3) the cause of such symptoms. 46 The Federal Rules of Evidence, upon which many states have patterned their rules of evidence, contain a hearsay exception for statements for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment. 47 Hearsay statements not essential or pertinent to diagnosis or treatment, and which only serve to corroborate details of prior testimony, are highly prejudicial, and thus not admissible under the medical diagnosis or treatment exception. 48

In some jurisdictions, statements made to a physician consulted solely for the purposes of preparing for litigation or obtaining testimony for trial do not share the medical diagnosis or treatment hearsay exception. 49 In other jurisdictions, it is held that the fact that the declarant consulted a physician knowing that legal action might be taken does not necessarily change the nature of the consultation, and statements made in the course of the consultation may be admissible under the medical diagnosis or treatment exception. 50

The rationale for the exception is that a patient has a strong motivation to be truthful about information that will form the basis of his diagnosis and treatment, making statements in this regard inherently trustworthy. 51 Based on this rationale, courts consider two factors in determining the admissibility of statements made for medical diagnosis or treatment: (1) whether the declarant's motive in speaking was consistent with receiving medical care; and (2) whether it was reasonable for the physician to rely on the statements in diagnosis or treatment. 52 Thus, statements by an injured person concerning the actual event that caused the injury are pertinent to diagnosis and treatment and are admissible, while statements concerning who was responsible for the injury are seldom, if ever, sufficiently related to diagnosis and treatment, and, generally, are not admissible. 53 However, this rule is relaxed when the case involves sexual abuse of children in the home. 54 A statement by a child abuse victim to a physician during an examination that the abuser is a member of the victim's immediate household is considered reasonably pertinent to treatment, and is excluded only with great caution. 55

Statements for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment do not have to be made to a physician, but can be made to any person, such as a hospital attendant, ambulance driver, or even a family member, provided they are made for the purpose of diagnosis or treatment. 56 Moreover, the statements need not refer to the declarant's own physical condition. 57 Statements relating to someone else's symptoms, pains, or sensations may be admissible, again provided that they are made for purposes of diagnosis or treatment. 58 In this regard, the relationship between the declarant and the patient usually determines admissibility. 59

- ◆ Observation: Where statements are relevant in diagnosing the cause of the declarant's condition, the fact that no treatment was contemplated or given does not render the statements inadmissible. 60

Case authorities:

Defendant's statements to a psychiatrist were made in preparation for his murder trial and were thus not admissible under the medical diagnosis or treatment exception to the hearsay rule set forth in G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 803(4) where the psychiatrist saw defendant less than two months before trial and nine months after the killing; defense counsel arranged defendant's interview by the psychiatrist; there was no evidence that the psychiatrist planned or proposed any course of treatment; and the psychiatrist's contact with defendant prior to trial was limited to one occasion while defendant was in jail. State v Harris (1994) 338 NC 211, 449 SE2d 462.

Statements made by defendant to a medical expert who stated an opinion that at the time of a killing defendant was so intoxicated that he was incapable of premeditation and deliberation were not admissible as substantive evidence under the medical diagnosis and treatment exception to the hearsay rule set forth in G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 803(4) where the statements were made by defendant ten months after the killing for the purpose of preparing and presenting a defense to the crimes for which he stood accused rather than for the purpose of seeking treatment of a medical condition or a diagnosis of his condition to obtain treatment. State v Jones (1994) 339 NC 114, 451 SE2d 826, reconsideration den (NC) 453 SE2d 188.

Statements made by defendant's mother and wife to defendant's medical expert were not admissible as substantive evidence under the medical diagnosis and treatment exception

The test for admissibility of statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment under Rule 803(4) of the Federal Rules of Evidence should be the same as under FRE, Rule 703, concerning expert testimony—whether an expert in the field would be justified in relying upon the statement in rendering his opinion. Under this standard, a statement is not admissible if it does not reveal symptoms, objective data, surrounding circumstances, or any similar factual data that a reasonable physician would consider relevant in the treatment or even diagnosis of a medical condition. Expressions of a patient's conclusion as to the appropriate medical diagnosis are not a basis upon which an expert in the field can rely in rendering an opinion. § 868 Statements by child abuse victims

View Entire Section

Go to Supplement

A child's statements concerning sexual or other physical abuse often are admitted over a hearsay objection where the statements conform to the rules governing one of the traditional spontaneous-statement exceptions to the hearsay rule, such as excited utterances or statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment. 61 In addition, some state legislatures have specifically enacted statutes which provide for a hearsay exception to children who have been victims of sexual abuse. 62 Typically, these statutes provide that a child's hearsay statement complaining of or describing any act of abuse or any conduct involving an unlawful sexual act performed in the presence of or on the declarant child is admissible if: (1) the court conducts a hearing outside the presence of the jury and finds that the time, content, and circumstances of the statement provide sufficient safeguards of reliability; and (2) the child either testifies at the proceeding or is unavailable as a witness, provided that if the child is unavailable, there is corroborative evidence of the act which is the subject of the statement. 63 In effect, states enacting such statutes have created a new, relaxed excited-utterance exception to the hearsay rule specifically designed for the young child-witness. 64 Under such an exception, a trial judge may find a child's hearsay statements unreliable on the ground that there has been a lapse of time and intervening counseling between the abuse and the statements at issue only when the evidence demonstrates that the lapse or counseling somehow affected the child's statements. 65

Other statutes allow for the admission of a child's hearsay statements about sexual or other physical abuse, where the statements are made (1) spontaneously within a reasonable time after an act of abuse is alleged to have occurred and (2) to someone the child would normally turn to for sympathy, protection, or advice. 66 Such statutes do not require that the person to whom the child speaks be previously known to him or her, thus allowing for the admission of statements to doctors. 67 Nor do such statutes require that a child be found competent before his or her statement may be admitted into evidence. 68

§ 868 ----Statements by child abuse victims [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Statements by child victim to grandmother within few hours of sexual assault were admissible as excited utterances, where statements were made at child's first opportunity, when grandmother arrived home from work, and child was "crying and incoherent" while she related events. People v Bolton (1993, Colo App) 859 P2d 311.

Statement made by sexual molestation victim "a few hours" after alleged molestation was admissible as excited utterance. State v Stover (1994, Idaho App) 881 P2d 553.

Statements made by six-year-old child victim of alleged sexual assault were not admissible under excited utterance exception to hearsay rule, where statements were made more than one year after alleged incidents and after substantial prodding and suggestive questioning. Felix v State (1993) 109 Nev 151, 849 P2d 220.

The trial court in a first-degree sex offense case did not err in admitting testimony of a social worker and two psychologists concerning statements made by the victims since those statements were made for the purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment and hence were admissible under G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 803(4). State v Figured (1994) 116 NC App 1, 446 SE2d 838.

A pediatrician's testimony that she asked an alleged rape, sexual offense and indecent liberties victim if anyone had touched her in a way that she did not like and that the victim replied that her father had was admissible under the medical diagnosis and treatment exception to the hearsay rule where the pediatrician examined the victim for possible sexual abuse. State v Hughes (1994) 114 NC App 742, 443 SE2d 76.

Statements made by sexual molestation victim to police officer interviewing victim 5 days after alleged molestation were not admissible as res gestae. State v Free (1994, La App 2d Cir) 643 So 2d 767.

§ 869 Admissibility as question of law or fact; burden of proof

Generally speaking, the admission of evidence is initially left to the discretion of the trial court, 70 and the question whether particular evidence is admissible under the res gestae doctrine or one of the spontaneous-statement exceptions to the hearsay rule is one of law for the court. 71

The proponent of a spontaneous statement has the burden of establishing its admissibility. 72

§ 869 ----Admissibility as question of law or fact; burden of proof [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court in a first-degree sex offense case did not err in admitting testimony of a social worker and two psychologists concerning statements made by the victims since those statements were made for the purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment and hence were admissible under G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 803(4). State v Figured (1994) 116 NC App 1, 446 SE2d 838.

2. Factors Affecting Admissibility of Spontaneous Statements [870-886]

a. In General [870-874]

§ 870 Establishment of principal fact

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The principal fact sought to be proved must be established before a spontaneous statement describing or explaining such fact may be admitted. 73 Thus, statements sought to be admitted as spontaneous statements accompanying an act are inadmissible where the act itself is inadmissible. 74

§ 870 ----Establishment of principal fact [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court's instruction in a prosecution for first-degree sex offenses against three children that there was some evidence "which tends to show that the defendant may have admitted a fact relating to the crime charged in this case" was supported by evidence that defendant said "Who, Brooks?" when informed that he was being arrested for statutory rape. Furthermore, the instruction did not constitute an expression of opinion on the evidence. State v Figured (1994) 116 NC App 1, 446 SE2d 838.

§ 871 Relevance of statements

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The admission of spontaneous statements in no event dispenses with the conventional requirements of relevancy and materiality in general; unless such a statement is relevant and material in the first instance, it is inadmissible. 75 Thus, regardless of the degree of spontaneity or contemporaneity of a declaration, to be admissible as a statement accompanying an act, the declaration must be relevant in that it must relate to the main event and must explain, elucidate, or in some way characterize that event. 76

For example, a hearsay statement—"it's not my business; it's my girlfriend's business,"—made by a defendant who had been questioned about his alleged importation of large parcels into the United States from Hong Kong is not admissible as a spontaneous statement concerning the defendant's then-existing mental state, because the statement does not negate any requisite criminal knowledge on the part of the defendant, and therefore is not relevant. 77 Similarly, statements made after a presentation of fraudulent documents to collect on a letter of credit are not relevant as to a defendant's own state of mind and intent as related to the criminal act. 78 On the other hand, testimony of a hearsay statement made by a defendant on trial for the murder of his wife, that if his wife ever left him, he would kill her, is admissible as a statement of the defendant's mental state and intent, and is not irrelevant merely because the defendant in fact left his wife, and not vice versa. 79

◆ Comment: A homicide victim's state of mind prior to any fatal incident is generally neither at issue nor probative of any material issue in a murder prosecution, and thus hearsay statements of the victim's state of mind are not admissible, but an exception exists when the victim's state of mind is relevant and necessary to rebut the defendant's claim of self-defense. 80

Footnote 76. Jones v Commonwealth, 11 Va App 75, 396 SE2d 844.

Before a spontaneous declaration, uttered at the scene of the accused's arrest, is admissible in evidence at the trial of an accused, the state must establish and demonstrate that the spontaneous declaration is related to or connected in some material way with the offense for which the accused is on trial for committing. Thus, in a prosecution for aggravated robbery, the trial court reversibly erred by admitting into evidence a spontaneous declaration containing an accusation that defendant had robbed and attempted to rape the declarant, which declaration, other than being the reason for defendant's arrest, had nothing to do with the aggravated robbery for which defendant was tried and convicted. Smith v State (Tex Crim) 646 SW2d 452.

§ 872 Declarant's personal knowledge of facts disclosed by statements; opinions

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Where a spontaneous statement has relevancy only for its disclosure of facts, it must appear, prima facie, that the speaker had personal knowledge of those facts in order for the statement to be admissible in evidence. ⁸¹ Although direct proof of perception is not necessary, the circumstantial evidence must be such that the purpose of the spontaneous-statement exceptions to the hearsay rule will not be defeated. ⁸² When there is no evidence of personal perception apart from the declaration itself, courts have hesitated to allow an excited utterance to stand alone as evidence of the declarant's opportunity to observe. ⁸³ Thus, in some instances, extrinsic evidence may be required to satisfy the personal perception requirement. ⁸⁴

Identification of the declarant, while often helpful in establishing that he or she was a percipient witness, is generally not a condition of admissibility. ⁸⁵ Thus, when the statement itself or other circumstantial evidence demonstrates the percipience of a declarant, whether identified or unidentified, the personal knowledge requirement is met. 86

Spontaneous statements that express only a supposition, conclusion, or opinion about the fact sought to be proved are not admissible. 87 Thus, the declaration of a person, particularly a bystander or other nonactor, after an accident as to whose fault it was is inadmissible because it is a mere expression of opinion. 88 However, a hearsay statement that simply describes in a few words a number of facts about the proximity, apposition, and movement of two motor vehicles, although couched in terms of an opinion, is admissible as a shorthand fact description, where the statement is not the sort of conscious deduction prohibited by the rules admitting spontaneous statements. 89

◆ Comment: The burden of establishing perception is on the proponent of the evidence. 90

A telephone conversation can supply indicia of reliability sufficient to support an inference that what was recorded by the declarant reflected the sense of what confronted him. Second, her identity was known to the prosecution. Third, when the police officers arrived at the scene within minutes, they observed and perceived (1) a broken window; (2) the declarant pointing at the defendants from her window; (3) other bystanders pointing at them as well; and (4) the fact that the perpetrators, having just completed the burglary, were seen by the officers carrying with them the proceeds of the crime. People v Luke, 136 Misc 2d 733, 519 NYS2d 316.

§ 873 Self-serving nature of statements

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Spontaneous statements which are otherwise admissible are not rendered inadmissible because they are self-serving in character, 91 although the self-serving character of a statement, such as with regard to the cause or responsibility for an accident, may be a factor which affords some indication of a lack of the spontaneity requisite to the applicability of spontaneous-statement exceptions to the hearsay rule. 92 On the other hand, the fact that a spontaneous statement is inculpatory or against the interest of the declarant will not affect its admissibility, and may be considered as an extra guaranty of the spontaneity of the statement. 93

§ 873 ----Self-serving nature of statements [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Statements of victim of shooting to neighbor and emergency medical technician naming defendant as person who shot him and his girlfriend when neighbor asked who shot him were admissible, even though victim did not say he saw defendant shoot him, where it was clear statement was what he perceived, statements were made shortly after he had been shot, near scene of crime, when victim feared he was going to die, and nothing indicated victim had incentive to falsify or distort. State v Stafford (1994) 255 Kan 807, 878 P2d 820.

There was no error in a first- degree murder prosecution where the court did not allow defendant to present an exculpatory statement made by defendant to an officer where defendant contended that the State opened the door when it introduced defendant's earlier remarks into evidence. Although it has been held that if the State submits parts of a defendant's confession the defendant must be allowed to present other parts of the statement even though they are self-serving, defendant's remarks here constituted two verbal transactions. The first remarks took place while defendant was being processed and fingerprinted, were unsolicited, and the conversation was terminated by the officer. The second remarks were made after a period of time had elapsed, after defendant had left one room and entered another, and after defendant had been given Miranda warnings and interrogation had begun. State v Vick (1995) 341 NC 569, 461 SE2d 655.

There was no error in a first- degree murder prosecution where the court did not allow defendant to present an exculpatory self- serving statement made by defendant because the State opened the door by asking the officer about earlier remarks. The State does not open the door for the introduction of another statement made later in the day by simply introducing an earlier statement by a defendant; a party is only entitled to introduce evidence that would have been inadmissible if offered initially where the other party introduces evidence as to a particular fact that is covered by the subsequent statement. State v Vick (1995) 341 NC 569, 461 SE2d 655.

§ 874 Declarant's availability to testify

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The admissibility of spontaneous statements generally does not depend upon the availability of the declarant as a witness at trial. 94 Under the Federal Rules of Evidence, there is no requirement that the declarant be unavailable before statements of present sense impression, excited utterances, statements of present mental or physical condition, or statements for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment may be admitted. 95 However, some jurisdictions retain an unavailability requirement for the admission of certain spontaneous statements. 96

◆ Comment: The Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution, which guarantees the accused in a criminal prosecution the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him, does not require that a declarant either testify at trial or be found unavailable to testify as a condition for the admission of spontaneous declarations or statements for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment. 97

§ 874 ----Declarant's availability to testify [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Trial court properly exercised its discretion to admit hearsay testimony, under res gestae exception, of police officer as to statements made by driver of car in which murder suspect and firearm were found, in which statement driver claimed that suspect owned gun and had placed it under seat, where driver was homicide victim prior to trial and was thus unavailable to testify. State v Toney (1993) 253 Kan 651, 862 P2d 350.

Present sense impression exception to hearsay rule does not require showing of declarant's unavailability as sine qua non to admissibility, though such factor may be weighed by trial judges in assessing traditional probativeness versus undue prejudice calculus for allowing evidence before petit jury; further, proponent of such evidence does not have obligation to show some special "necessity" before such evidence is deemed admissible. People v Buie (1995) 86 NY2d 501, 634 NYS2d 415, 658 NE2d 192.

Victim's availability and testimony did not otherwise preclude admissibility of 911 tape of victim's telephone call to police, which contained victim's description of unfolding events to operator, under present sense impression hearsay exception, where it was undisputed that 911 call was contemporaneous with victim's observations and independently corroborated by much other evidence. People v Buie (1995) 86 NY2d 501, 634 NYS2d 415, 658 NE2d 192.

there existed a reasonable probability that the testimony was truthful.

b. General Nature and Condition of Declarant; Identification [875-881]

§ 875 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The person making a spontaneous statement need not be a participant in the principal act in order for the statement to be admissible; 98 for example, he may be have been a bystander. 99

Identification of the declarant, while often helpful in establishing that he or she was a percipient witness, is generally not a condition of admissibility, 1 provided there is proof that the declarant actually witnessed the act his statements purport to explain or describe. 2 In fact, the specific identity of the declarant need not even be established. 3 Thus, for example, testimony that, after a collision, an unidentified person at the scene had shouted a statement indicating that the plaintiff's decedent had been attempting to pass the defendant's car at the time of the collision is admissible under the rule admitting spontaneous utterances. 4

§ 876 Effect of incompetency

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The fact that the declarant is incompetent to testify as a witness does not affect the admissibility of his statements under the spontaneous-statement exceptions to the hearsay rule; 5 so long as a statement qualifies as a spontaneous declaration, it is reliable and admissible regardless of the competency of the declarant, since the reliability of the statement comes from the circumstances under which the statement are made. 6 Thus, testimony concerning spontaneous statements made by persons incompetent to testify because of insanity, mental defect, or other mental deficiency is nonetheless admissible in evidence. 7 Likewise, spontaneous statements of a husband and wife are generally admissible for or against each other, even if the spouse would be incompetent to testify as a witness in the case. 8 Similarly, the fact that the declarant is a convict or an unpardoned felon, incompetent to testify, will not affect the admissibility of testimony of his or her spontaneous statements. 9 There have been differing conclusions made, based on the circumstances, as to the admissibility of a child's spontaneous statement. 10

§ 877 Declarant asleep or unconscious

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In some jurisdictions, the expressions of a person made while asleep are not admissible as spontaneous statements, since they proceed from an unconscious and irresponsible condition. 11 It has been said that such expressions have little or no meaning, are as likely to refer to unreal facts or conditions as to things real, and are wholly unreliable, and a jury ought not to be allowed to guess that such expressions are produced by a present mental or physical condition. 12 The same reasoning has been applied to an utterance offered as a spontaneous statement made by a person while unconscious by reason of an injury. 13 But the view has also been followed, in some instances, that there should be no question as to the competency of a spontaneous statement because of an alleged unconscious state of the declarant, unless the language is incoherent and the speaker delirious. 14

§ 878 Declarant who died shortly after making statement

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The fact that the declarant died only a short time after making his statement is not, by itself, decisive of the question of the statement's admissibility under one of the spontaneous-statement exceptions to the hearsay rule; however, it is a factor which may be considered in conjunction with all the other pertinent circumstances bearing on admissibility. 15 The fact that the declarant died only a short time after making his statement tends to rebut the idea that his statement was made with premeditation and design. 16

The spontaneous-statement exceptions to the hearsay rule apply to statements made by bystanders as well as participants. 17 Thus, for example, a statement by a man who witnessed an accident—"Lord, the lady is going to get run over"—qualifies as an excited utterance even though the man was not involved in the accident except as a witness. 18 Similarly, statements made by bystanders yelling when police officers arrived at the scene of a crime are admissible as part of one continuing transaction. 19

§ 881 Child

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Generally, the fact that a child may be incompetent to testify as a witness ²¹ does not make a spontaneous statement by him or her inadmissible, ²² because the nature of a spontaneous statement is such that it obviates the usual source of untrustworthiness in children's testimony. ²³ Some jurisdictions have relaxed the common-law requirements of contemporaneity and spontaneity for the admission of statements made by a young child, ²⁴ particularly in cases of child abuse. ²⁵ However, some courts have found the allegedly spontaneous statements of a child too unreliable to admit into evidence, where the child's competency to testify truthfully was clearly questionable, ²⁶ or where the contemporaneity of the event and statement could not be established with any precision. ²⁷

§ 881 ----Child [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Three-year-old's statement identifying defendant as assailant was properly admitted under excited utterance exception even though it came 20 minutes after event where child witnessed beating, cried for 20 minutes, then asked witness, her grandmother, whether they could pray for victim and for defendant who had beaten victim. United States v Sowa (1994, CA7 Ill) 34 F3d 447.

In child sexual abuse trial, testimony of victim's brother as to what victim had told him in early morning hours only few minutes after last of three acts of molestation was admissible, since victim was young girl who was, at time of recounting, distraught and in tears. State v Parkinson (1996, App) 128 Idaho 29, 909 P2d 647.

In prosecution for defendant's molestation of his 5-year-old grandson, trial court properly admitted victim's testimony regarding defendant's uncharged offense of molestation of victim's 3-year-old brother, although evidence was not admissible in order to prove that defendant had depraved sexual instinct, where testimony fell within res gestae branch of common scheme or plan exception, since molestation of brother was identical to molestation of victim, acts occurred contemporaneously, in same manner and at exact same location. Palmer v State (1994, Ind App) 640 NE2d 415.

c. Time and Circumstances in Which Statement was Made [882-886]

§ 882 Generally; requirement of contemporaneity with principal fact

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Spontaneous statements derive their reliability in part from the fact that they are made so near in time to the event they purport to explain or describe that there is little chance that they are based on a fabrication or a faulty memory. 28 Thus, as a general rule, a declaration or utterance sought to be proved under one of the spontaneous-statement exceptions to the hearsay rule must be contemporaneous with the event established as the principal act; it must spring from this act at the time of its occurrence, without any intervening interval or opportunity for deliberation in forming the statement. 29 The declaration or utterance need not in all strictness be contemporaneous, in the sense of simultaneous, with the principal act. 30 Rather, spontaneous statements only need be "substantially contemporaneous" with the event they purport to describe or explain. 31 The appropriate inquiry is whether, considering the surrounding circumstances, sufficient time elapsed to have permitted reflective thought. 32 In other words, it is logical that the theory admitting spontaneous statements should have its limits determined, not by the strict meaning of the term "contemporaneous," but rather by the causal, natural, or psychological relation of such exclamations to the primary facts in controversy. 33 Thus, the mathematical elapsed time between the event and the making of a statement relative thereto is not alone decisive of the question whether the statement is admissible, but it is enough that the two are so clearly connected that the declaration can, in the ordinary course of affairs, be said to be a spontaneous explanation of the real cause. 34 It is clear, on the other hand, that if the declarations are not in their nature a part of the act and do not characterize, explain, or flow therefrom, they are inadmissible in evidence, regardless of how closely related to the main event in point of time. 35

The present sense impression exception to the hearsay rule 36 requires a closer time proximity than the excited utterance exception. 37 Since precise contemporaneity between a statement of present sense impression and the event prompting it often is impossible, a slight time lapse is allowable, 38 although the time interval must be very short. 39 Under the excited utterance exception, the standard of measurement for the time interval between the event and the statement is the duration of the state of excitement. 40 Courts have varied greatly in determining how much of a time lapse between an event and an excited utterance is too much. 41 For example, it has been stated that 4 1/2 to 5 hours represents the extreme outer limit to which the excited utterance exception can be pushed, 42 although statements made possibly 1 or 2 days after an occurrence of child abuse have been admitted as excited utterances. 43 (LOGO)Comment: Verbal acts must be simultaneous with the fact to be proved in order to be admissible. 44

§ 882 ----Generally; requirement of contemporaneity with principal fact [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In husband's prosecution for murdering wife, trial court did not err in admitting, as res gestae, statements made by wife concerning her relationship with husband, even though prosecution did not identify time at which statements were made. State v Gadelkarim (1994) 256 Kan 671, 887 P2d 88.

Court did not abuse its discretion in determining that written exculpatory statement made by defendant in different precinct one hour after his spontaneous oral inculpatory statement was inadmissible hearsay and was independent of oral statement. People v Hentley (1989, 1st Dept) 155 AD2d 392, 547 NYS2d 876, app den 75 NY2d 919, 555 NYS2d 38, 554 NE2d 75.

An exculpatory statement about the shooting of the victim made by defendant to the aunt with whom he lived was not admissible as an excited utterance and was properly excluded as hearsay in this first-degree murder trial where defendant first talked with his aunt on the telephone after the shooting from his grandmother's house but did not mention the shooting, and defendant waited until he went to his aunt's home an hour after the shooting to tell her what had happened, since defendant had time to manufacture the statement and the statement lacked spontaneity. The trustworthiness of a spontaneous statement is based on the startling or exciting nature of the act observed and on the spontaneity of the statement made under the stress of excitement produced by declarant's observation of that act or event. § 883 Statements made prior to principal fact

View Entire Section

Declarations made before a specific act takes place are admissible if the declarations tend to illustrate and give character to the act. 45 For example, when the question is whether a person did a certain act, his declarations, oral or written, made prior to and approximately at the time he is alleged to have done the act, to the effect that he intended to do it, are admissible as original evidence, if made under circumstances precluding any suspicion of misrepresentation. 46 To a like effect, utterances preceding an accident or injury, even if somewhat remote from it, are admissible if they are so linked with it in continuity of action and proof as to constitute a part of the res gestae. 47 But statements made before the principal act occurred, or was within the contemplation of the parties, are not admissible, although separated by but a short span of time, unless the declarations tend to explain the principal act, since otherwise they cannot be said to throw any light upon the act or the motive for it. 48

§ 884 Statements made after principal fact; narrative accounts

A statement which is merely narrative of a past occurrence generally is not admissible in evidence as a spontaneous statement, notwithstanding the fact that it is made soon after the occurrence. 49 However, the fact that a statement made subsequent to an act or occurrence was narrative in form sometimes does not preclude its admissibility, provided it meets all the requirements of admissibility as a spontaneous statement. 50 In any case, when opportunity for formulation of the content of the statement has existed to sufficient extent to prevent the declaration from becoming part of the main event, the courts generally reject the statement as hearsay, regardless of the character of the declaration or the event it seeks to explain or characterize. 51 Similarly, statements which are written long after the event they record or which form no integral part thereof are not admissible as spontaneous statements. 52

§ 885 Statements made in response to questioning

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The fact that a statement was made in response to a question does not itself deprive that statement of the spontaneity necessary for admissibility under one of the spontaneous-statement exceptions to the hearsay rule. 53 Rather, the fact that an utterance was in response to an inquiry is merely one factor bearing on the spontaneity of the utterance. 54 In other words, the nature, extent and purpose of the questions and the identity, position and manner of the questioner are but additional factors to be considered in determining whether the statements were made under the continuing influence of the stress and excitement generated by the initial event. 55

In some jurisdictions, the key inquiry in deciding whether a statement in response to questioning is admissible as a spontaneous statement is whether the statement would have been made if the questions had not been asked. 56 Other courts hold that an otherwise admissible declaration is not rendered inadmissible by questioning which (1) is neither coercive nor leading, (2) facilitates the declarant's expression of what is already the natural focus of the declarant's thoughts, and (3) does not destroy the domination of the nervous excitement over the declarant's reflective faculties. 57

§ 886 Statements made after regaining consciousness

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Declarations made immediately upon regaining consciousness by a party injured in an accident by which he was rendered unconscious are viewed by most courts as being as much a part of the occurrence as if they had been made immediately after the accident. 58 According to these courts, the period of unconsciousness is not to be taken into consideration in determining the question of spontaneity as affected by the lapse of time. 59 The real test is whether the circumstances exclude premeditation and design. 60 The fact that declarations are made in response to questions of an attending physician when such injured person is first restored to consciousness will not affect the admissibility of such statements, 61 although it is a factor entitled to consideration. 62

◆ Comment: Statements made by a declarant upon regaining consciousness are not admissible as spontaneous statements where the declarant was conscious for a period of time following the occurrence which caused his injury and was then able to speak. 63

3. Principal Facts Provable by Spontaneous Statements [887-889]

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table

Statements of present sense impression may be introduced to prove any event or condition perceived by the declarant. 64 Excited utterances may be introduced to prove a wider range of facts, inasmuch as such utterances need only "relate" to a startling event or condition. 65 In this regard, the hearsay exception in Rule 803(2) of the Federal Rules of Evidence for excited utterances affords a broader scope of subject matter coverage than the exception for statements of present sense impression in Rule 803(1). 66 Statements admissible under the excited utterance exception are not confined to descriptions or explanations of the startling event itself, but may include statements that tend to prove facts such as notice or agency. 67

Statements of present mental, emotional, or physical condition may be introduced to prove any condition experienced internally by the declarant at the time of his statements, such as his intent, plan, motive, design, mental feeling, pain, or bodily health. 68 Past or present symptoms, pain, or sensations, including the declarant's medical history and the cause of the pain, may be proved by statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment. 69

◆ Observation: A conversation, telephone or otherwise, is an "event" within the meaning of the federal rule excepting present sense impressions from the hearsay rule. 70

If an utterance is concurrent with the force or action that immediately results in one's injury or damage, and is so made that it derives testimonial credit from the attention of the speaker to what is happening, it is admissible as a present sense impression and has probative effect to explain the occurrence. 71 Similarly, an accident or injury may be explained by excited utterances made while the declarant was still under the stress of the event. 72

Testimony given at a former trial or proceeding between parties to an action or proceeding is hearsay, 75 and unless a proper foundation is laid which brings the prior testimony within an exception to the hearsay rule, 76 this testimony is not admissible in evidence. 77 If the witness is available, the witness must be produced the same as if he or she were testifying de novo. 78

Case authorities:

§ 891 Exception to rule, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Testimony given at a former trial or proceeding between parties to an action or proceeding is hearsay, and unless a proper foundation is laid which brings the prior testimony within an exception to the hearsay rule, this testimony is not admissible in evidence. 79 However, the law recognizes that it is sometimes impossible to produce a witness who has testified at a former trial, and in such cases where the second action involves substantially the same issues, 80 is between the same parties or someone having a similar interest, 81 and where the party against whom the evidence is offered had the opportunity to cross-examine the witness who gave the testimony, 82 the testimony given at the former hearing or trial is admissible in the later one. 83 The Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence codify this common-law hearsay exception by providing for the admission of the former testimony of an unavailable witness whose testimony was given as a witness at another hearing of the same or a different proceeding, or in a deposition taken in compliance with law in the course of the same or another proceeding, if the party against whom the testimony is now offered, or in a civil action or proceeding, a predecessor in interest, had an opportunity and similar motive to develop the testimony by direct, cross, or redirect examination. 84 The legislative history to the federal rule indicates that this exception is to be narrowly construed. 85 When found to be admissible, former testimony has been admitted on the principle that it is the best of which the case admits. 86 The issue becomes one of fairness to the respective parties, together with orderly and expeditious administration of justice under the facts and circumstances shown to the trial court. 87 Testimony from a former trial should not be admitted if to do so would result in a miscarriage of justice. 88 Any part of the former testimony that is irrelevant may be excluded at the subsequent trial. 89

The exception to the hearsay rule permitting the introduction of evidence given at a former trial or proceeding is applicable to criminal proceedings 90 as well as civil cases, and where testimony given in a criminal case is sought to be used in a subsequent civil case. 91 The exception also generally applies, regardless of whether the former proceeding was judicial, legislative, or administrative, so long as the requisites for the admissibility of former testimony have been met. 92 The admissibility of testimony of a witness given during a prior proceeding involves the discretion of the trial judge, and the discretion of the trial judge will not be disturbed absent an abuse of discretion. 93

codefendant at joint trial for federal firearms offenses after both were acquitted of murder in separate state trials, where redaction of testimony to eliminate any reference to other codefendant can cure potential Sixth amendment harm if codefendant invokes his Fifth Amendment privilege, because testimony falls within former testimony exception to hearsay rule, FRE 804(b)(1). United States v Lombard (1993, DC Me) 853 F Supp 549.

Defendant was not entitled to have his exculpatory testimony from first trial introduced via government's case agent where he created his own unavailability by invoking privilege against self-incrimination. United States v Kimball (1994, CA5 La) 15 F3d 54, 38 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1363, petition for certiorari filed (May 10, 1994).

The trial court did not err by permitting the State to offer into evidence at defendant's resentencing for first-degree murder the testimony of two witnesses from the first trial. Under State v. Grier, 314 N.C. 59, all that is required is a good faith effort to locate the witness, and the State provided ample evidence of its unsuccessful efforts to find the two witnesses. State v Bacon (1994) 337 NC 66, 446 SE2d 542.

There was no error in a first- degree murder retrial where a witness who had testified at the first trial had subsequently been indicted and refused to answer questions based upon the Fifth Amendment and the witness's testimony at the first trial was admitted. Although defendant contends that the witness was an alibi witness at the first trial and that defendant did not have a similar motive for questioning the witness during the second trial, there was no reasonable showing that the motive would have been different. That motive was to seek the facts favorable to defendant regarding defendant's whereabouts at the time of the crime and defense counsel had ample opportunity to develop this testimony. G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(1). State v Hunt (1995) 339 NC 622, reconsideration den 339 NC 741.

§ 892 Criminal proceedings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The exception to the hearsay rule which allows testimony given at a former trial or proceeding to be used in evidence, when certain circumstances are present which preclude attendance of the witness in person, 94 is applicable to criminal prosecutions if a proper foundation has been laid, including a showing that the witness is no longer "available," 95 subject to such local statutes or practice as may define the rights of the prosecution or the defendant in such matters. 96

The use of a former witness' testimony is not violative of the accused's constitutional right to be confronted with the witnesses against him if, at the preliminary hearing or former trial, the accused had been accorded an adequate opportunity to cross-examine the witness. 97 Additionally, the admission of prior testimony does not violate a defendant's right of confrontation if the party offering the prior testimony demonstrates the actual unavailability of the witness despite good-faith and due diligent efforts to secure the presence of the witness at trial, 98 and if the transcript of the witness' testimony bears sufficient indicia of reliability to afford the trier of fact a satisfactory basis for evaluating the truth of the prior testimony. 99 The test for reliability involves two components: the testimony must be shown to be reliable when given, and it must be shown that the testimony was accurately preserved. 1

Hearsay rule does not apply to grand jury proceedings. Alexiou v United States (In re Subpoena to Testify Before the Grand Jury) (1994, CA9 Wash) 39 F3d 973, 94 CDOS 8521, 94 Daily Journal DAR 15600.

Trial court erred in permitting state to use transcript of preliminary hearing testimony of absent witness at defendant's trial on charge of unlawful possession of firearm, where state failed to prove that it had exercised reasonable diligence in attempting to ascertain whereabouts of witness; mere proof that warrant had been issued for witness, and that police officers "had not seen" witness did not show reasonable diligence in attempting to ascertain whereabouts of absent witness. State v Mitchell (1993) 18 Kan App 2d 530, 855 P2d 989.

Court properly precluded defendant's attempts to impeach testimony of undercover officer with statements relating to collateral matters which he made at trial of another individual. People v Jenkins (1992, 2d Dept) 186 AD2d 583, 588 NYS2d 802, app den 81 NY2d 841, 595 NYS2d 740, 611 NE2d 779.

The trial court did not err by permitting the State to offer into evidence at defendant's resentencing for first-degree murder the testimony of two witnesses from the first trial. Under State v. Grier, 314 N.C. 59, all that is required is a good faith effort to locate the witness, and the State provided ample evidence of its unsuccessful efforts to find the two witnesses. State v. Bacon (1994) 337 NC 66, 446 SE2d 542.

The trial court did not err in a prosecution for attempted rape and first-degree murder by admitting evidence of another rape to which defendant pled guilty, where the similarity between the two crimes, closely connected temporally, clearly supports the admission of the other rape to prove identity and intent. N.C.G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 404(b). State v. Carter (1994) 338 NC 569, 451 SE2d 157.

The trial court did err in a first- degree murder resentencing hearing by allowing a codefendant's testimony from a prior trial to be read into evidence where the codefendant had asserted his privilege against self-incrimination. Whether this evidence was admissible under GS § 8C-1, Rule 804 is not controlling; defendant was not awarded a new trial but a new capital sentencing hearing. GS § 15A- 2000(a)(3) expressly provides that evidence presented during the guilt determination phase of a capital case is competent and admissible as a matter of law during a capital sentencing proceeding. State v. McLaughlin (1995) 341 NC 426, 462 SE2d 1.

In prosecution of defendant for murder, robbery, and other crimes, trial court did not err in admitting in evidence record taken at preliminary hearing of testimony of eyewitness who died before time of trial where defendant had had full and fair opportunity to cross-examine witness at that hearing. Commonwealth v. Thompson (1994, Pa) 648 A2d 315.

In murder prosecution, fact that wife's grand jury testimony was read at defendant's trial did not warrant reversal, where reasons for disallowing grand jury testimony were not compelling since testimony in record made it clear that reason wife was called before grand jury was for purpose of providing evidence against her sister-in-law and not her own husband, there was nothing adverse to defendant in testimony that was read at his trial, and when witness-spouse's testimony was not adverse to defendant- spouse, such testimony did not necessarily fall within protection of marital privilege. State v. Jarrell (1994, W Va) 442 SE2d 223.

§ 893 --Right of accused to reproduce former testimony

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Rules adopted with respect to permitting or rejecting testimony in favor of the prosecution have been applied where the accused seeks to reproduce the testimony of an absent witness at a former trial or preliminary hearing. 2 The same rules with respect to authentication of testimony, 3 and the circumstances permitting reproduction of testimony, 4 apply as in cases where the prosecution attempts to introduce the testimony. 5 There is authority to the effect that in order to use former testimony of a witness who has since become unavailable, the party against whom the testimony is offered must have been present when the testimony was given. 6 In circumstances where the prosecution does not have a similar interest and opportunity to develop the testimony at the prior proceeding, such evidence is not admissible. 7 If, on its own behalf, the state introduces only a part of the testimony given at the former trial, the defendant may prove the rest of the testimony given by the witness. 8

The federal courts have divided over whether the hearsay exception permitting the use of prior testimony 9 authorizes admission of the prior testimony where a defendant in a criminal trial seeks to introduce a deposition from a former civil trial in which the government was not a party. According to some courts, deposition testimony will be excluded despite the fact that issues were similar at the earlier trial and the declarant was cross-examined therein, since the government did not itself have an opportunity to cross-examine. 10 However, elsewhere the view has been taken that if a party in a civil case and the government, in a later criminal case, have sufficiently similar incentives to develop the testimony in question, the hearsay exception 11 is not necessarily unavailable to a criminal defendant. 12

§ 894 Use, in civil case, of former testimony in criminal case

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Testimony in a criminal proceeding of a witness who is no longer "available" is generally admissible in a subsequent civil action if the parties and issues are substantially the same, and if the person against whom the testimony is offered had an adequate opportunity to cross-examine at the time the testimony was given. 13 The question often arises when testimony given against a defendant in a criminal trial was subsequently proffered against the same person, or one whose interests were the same, in a subsequent civil action involving the same transaction. 14 But, in some instances, testimony given on behalf of a defendant in a criminal trial has been held admissible on behalf of the same person in a subsequent civil action where the witness who testified at the criminal trial was no longer accessible and the person against whom the testimony was proffered was the prosecuting witness in the criminal action. 15 Whether there is substantial identity of parties and issues is a preliminary factual issue question for determination by the court, 16 and where it is determined that the party against whom the evidence is offered and the party against whom the testimony was given in the criminal case are not substantially the same, the former testimony will be excluded in the subsequent civil case. 17

According to other authorities, testimony given on the trial of a criminal case cannot be used against the defendant in the criminal action on the trial of a civil action involving the same transaction, although the witness is dead or is otherwise not procurable, for the reason that the parties and issues in the criminal and civil cases are not identical. 18 On this basis, some courts hold that testimony given in a prior traffic court proceeding against a driver is not admissible before a jury trying a civil negligence action against that driver. 19

On the other hand, testimony given in a prior criminal prosecution against an attorney is admissible in a disbarment proceeding against him if the witness who gave such testimony is no longer accessible. 20

Testimony of a witness at a former trial of a business partner for arson in connection with a fire destroying partnership property was admissible at the trial of an action brought by the partner and his copartner to recover on fire insurance policies, where the witness, at the trial of the latter action, rightfully claimed his privilege against self-incrimination. It was immaterial that the copartner did not participate in the alleged burning of the insured property, was not a party defendant in the criminal case, and had no opportunity to cross-examine in that case, the accused partner having the same motive and interest in cross-examining the witnesses in the criminal case as would the copartner in the civil case. It was also immaterial that in the criminal case, the state, rather than the insurer, was the adversary of the accused partner. Travelers Fire Ins. Co. v Wright (Okla) 322 P2d 417, 70 ALR2d 1170.

§ 895 Former testimony as subject to ordinary objections and exceptions

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In general, testimony given by a witness at the first trial, if used at a subsequent trial, is open to all proper objections and exceptions which would exclude the testimony of the witness to the same matters, 21 particularly with regard to questions of competency 22 and relevancy. 23 However, former testimony is ordinarily not open to the objections ordinarily urged against hearsay evidence because it has been delivered under the sanction of an oath and has been subject to the right of the adverse party to cross-examine the witness giving it. 24

In some cases, objections to the testimony of a witness which were available but not urged at the first trial are deemed to be waived and cannot be urged at the subsequent trial. 25

2. Requisites for Admissibility [896-923]

a. In General [896-905]

§ 896 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Generally, there are three essential requirements which must be met in order to use testimony from a prior proceeding: (1) the prior proceeding must have involved substantially the same issues; 26 (2) the party against whom the testimony is sought to be used or someone having a similar interest, 27 must have had a fair opportunity and adequate motive to cross-examine the witness under oath in the earlier proceeding; 28 and (3) the witness must be unavailable to testify in the present case. 29 It has been noted that the requirement that there be an identity of parties and issues is but a convenient phrase to indicate a situation where the underlying requirement of adequacy of the present opponent's opportunity of cross-examination would usually be satisfied, 30 and that identity of parties is not required where the party against whom the former testimony is offered had a full opportunity to cross-examine the witness. 31

In order that former evidence may be admissible upon a subsequent proceeding, it must have been introduced in the regular course of a trial or proceeding 32 before a tribunal capable of enforcing the attendance of witnesses, administering oaths, and employing cross-examination as a part of its procedure. 33 According to some courts, former testimony may not be utilized if the witness had not been sworn at the hearing or former trial. 34

In many jurisdictions, statutes have been enacted which provide for and regulate the reproduction of testimony given upon a former trial. These requirements vary, of course, in the different jurisdictions, and it is essential, therefore, that one desiring to use such testimony examine carefully the provisions of his local statutes, for where admissibility of evidence given upon a former trial is regulated by statute, the testimony cannot be reproduced unless the requirements of the statute are substantially complied with. 35

Case authorities:

In prosecution of police officer who used threats of arrest to coerce five prostitutes to engage in various sexual acts with him against their will, district court did not abuse its discretion in excluding another police officer's testimony that prostitute warned him he was "next," since it was uncorroborated, speculative testimony of mysterious conspiracy to frame defendant. United States v Sanchez (1996, CA5 Tex) 74 F3d 562.

In prosecution of defendant for multiple counts of mail fraud in connection with his operation of mail-correspondence university, evidence of state court injunction against defendant after he attempted to open university in that state and prior indictment and conviction for mail fraud in another state for mail-correspondence universities were properly admitted as relevant to his state of mind, notice of illegality of his conduct, absence of mistake, and to rebut his good faith defense. United States v Reddeck (1994, CA10 Utah) 22 F3d 1504.

Exclusion from patent infringement suit of evidence of prior litigation involving patent was proper since prior decision that patent has previously survived attack on its validity serves only to inform district court that caution must be taken in reaching contrary legal conclusion, judge did permit introduction of part of proffered evidence as marginally relevant to issue of obviousness, but judge's opinion in prior litigation was not needed for any legitimate purpose and could have had improper influence on jury. Mendenhall v Cedarapids, Inc. (1993, CA FC) 5 F3d 1557, 28 USPQ2d 1081, reh, en ban, den Mendenhall v Cedarapids, Inc. (1993, CA FC) 1993 US App LEXIS 30108.

In murder prosecution, trial court did not err in admitting witness' preliminary hearing testimony where, at time of trial, witness had been diagnosed as having incurable liver cancer, was being medicated 24 hours per day, and was experiencing memory lapses and auditory hallucinations, and where defendant had been fully able to cross-examine witness at preliminary hearing. State v Stafford (1994) 255 Kan 807, 878 P2d 820.

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table

Under the Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence, the former testimony of an unavailable witness is admissible in a civil action or proceeding if the party against whom the testimony is now offered had an opportunity and similar motive to develop the testimony by direct, cross, or redirect examination. 36 Under the common law, it was stated that in order to render admissible on a subsequent trial the former testimony of a witness who has since become unavailable, there must be a substantial identity between the parties to the first and the parties to the subsequent action or proceeding. 37 However, complete mutuality 38 or absolute identity of parties is not necessary to admit prior testimony into evidence. 39 It is enough that there is a practical or representative identity of the party against whom the prior testimony is offered. 40 Further, there is authority for the view that it is not necessary that the party offering the evidence be involved in the previous suit if the parties against whom the evidence is offered are substantially the same. 41 Whether there is substantial identity of parties is a preliminary factual question for determination by the court. 42 Where it is determined that the party against whom the evidence is offered and the party against whom the testimony was given in the criminal case are not substantially the same, the former testimony will be excluded in the subsequent civil case. 43

The fundamental reason for the requirement of identity of parties in order to render former testimony admissible is the necessity that there have been full opportunity to cross-examine. 44 In view of the close relationship between the requirement of necessity of opportunity for cross-examination 45 and the rule requiring identity of parties, there is a tendency to subordinate the latter rule to the former and make the test of admissibility the presence of an adequate opportunity for cross-examination on the identical issues. 46 Thus, even though there is lack of identity of parties in the subsequent trial, the former testimony is admissible when the party against whom it is offered, as a party to the former action, had full opportunity to cross-examine the witness, 47 and when the subsequent trial is based upon the same transaction or the same property or status involved. 48 However, the view that actual identity of parties or privity between parties is not essential as long as it appears that in the former suit a party having a like motive to cross-examine about the same matters as the present party would have was accorded an adequate opportunity for cross-examination has been rejected where statutory provisions require identity of parties as a prerequisite to the admissibility of former testimony. 49

§ 898 --Privity, in civil actions and proceedings

View Entire Section

The requirement as to the identity of parties is satisfied by the existence of the relation of privity. 50 While the term privity generally involves a party so identical in interest with another that he represents the same legal right, a determination of just who are privities requires a careful examination into the circumstances of each case. 51 A finding of privity has been predicated on relationships arising from connection with a decedent's estate, 52 or out of interests in property, 53 the relationship of employer and employee, 54 principal and surety, 55 or of successive plaintiffs in actions for wrongful death. 56

§ 899 --Predecessor in interest, in civil actions and proceedings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Under the Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence, the former testimony of an unavailable witness is admissible in a civil action or proceeding if the party against whom the testimony is now offered, 57 or a predecessor in interest, had an opportunity and similar motive to develop the testimony by direct, cross, 58 or redirect examination. 59 The rationale behind this rule is that it is considered unfair to impose upon the party against whom the evidence is being offered responsibility for the manner in which the witness was previously handled by another party, unless that other party was a predecessor in interest. 60

The predecessor in interest requirement is broader than the common-law privity requirement, 61 which required a common property interest between the parties. 62 The fact of being a predecessor in interest is not limited to a legal relationship, but is also to be determined by whether the defendant had an opportunity and similar motive to develop the testimony by cross-examination. 63

A party to one cause of action is not a predecessor in interest to another party pursuing a different cause of action on a similar theory, 64 even against a common defendant. 65 Predecessors in interest may include: the United States, with respect to testimony given at a federal antitrust action followed by private antitrust actions; 66 the Coast Guard, with respect to a license suspension hearing followed by a private action for personal injuries incurred in the incident which was the subject of the hearing; 67 the owner of a company, with respect to testimony given in a previous criminal trial in which he was prosecuted for bribing a union, followed by a civil action against the company for conspiring with the union to deprive employees of contractual rights; 68 the owner of a labor-leasing company, as to testimony given in a criminal prosecution and admissible in a subsequent civil suit against the company; 69 and a creditor who sought to establish the debtor's ownership of a home, where a trustee in bankruptcy subsequently sought to do the same. 70

The testimony of an unavailable witness from a criminal trial of a defendant on charges of solicitation to murder was not admissible in an action brought by an insurer in which the insurer had claimed that the insured had been killed as a result of a conspiracy between the defendant and the widow of the insured, because the defendant had no motivation to clear the widow's name during the course of his criminal trial. § 900 --In criminal cases

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

In a criminal prosecution, testimony given at a former trial or at a preliminary hearing is not admissible unless it appears that the defendant against whom it was offered was a party to such former proceedings. 71 The testimony of an absent witness given at another's previous trial for the same offense with which the defendant is charged is not admissible in a subsequent proceeding. 72 However, testimony given at a former prosecution by a witness not available at a subsequent trial is admissible, notwithstanding the circumstance that at the first trial the defendant against whom it was given was tried alone and on the subsequent trial he was tried jointly with another. 73

◆ Observation: The issue of whether one is a predecessor in interest in criminal cases does not arise because one has to be a party in the prior proceeding before testimony can be used at another trial. 74

§ 900 --In criminal cases [SUPPLEMENT]Case authorities:

Trial court properly admitted, at second trial, former testimony of fact witness in first trial for kidnapping and rape after finding that witness was unavailable, where prosecutor's investigator double-checked witness' former residence, which had been subsequently torn down; subpoenaed utility records; asked about witness in her old neighborhood; inquired of local nursing homes; and checked criminal records. Vick v State (1993) 314 Ark 618, 863 SW2d 820.

The trial court did err in a first-degree murder resentencing hearing by allowing a codefendant's testimony from a prior trial to be read into evidence where the codefendant had asserted his privilege against self-incrimination. Whether this evidence was admissible under GS § 8C-1, Rule 804 is not controlling; defendant was not awarded a new trial but a new capital sentencing hearing. GS § 15A- 2000(a)(3) expressly provides that evidence presented during the guilt determination phase of a capital case is competent and admissible as a matter of law during a capital sentencing proceeding. State v McLaughlin (1995) 341 NC 426, 462 SE2d 1.

In malicious wounding prosecution, trial court erred in admitting absent witness' preliminary hearing testimony where prosecutor knew that witness was out of state and stayed at home of relative several nights each month, and had left several unanswered messages for witness there, but had not sought out relative to gather information on witness' whereabouts, and had not requested that summons be issued for appearance of witness on final trial date. State v Shepherd (1994, W Va) 442 SE2d 440.

In prosecution for first degree murder, trial court did not err in allowing previous testimony of state's witness, an inmate representative who was present when defendant confessed, to be introduced and read into record. Witness' refusal to testify at trial, despite court order and contempt citation, clearly fell under express provisions of statute requiring unavailability, as well as fulfilling mandate of Confrontation Clause of Sixth amendment. Moreover, despite defendant's claim that his counsel was limited by court in his cross-examination of witness at hearing on defendant's motion to suppress confession, defense counsel clearly was afforded and exercised his right to cross-examine witness at preliminary hearing. As such, witness' previous testimony bore requisite "indicia of reliability" required by Sixth amendment and was properly admitted and read into evidence. State v Adams (1992, La App 4th Cir) 609 So 2d 894.

§ 901 Identity of issues

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In general, in order to render admissible in a civil case testimony or depositions in a former proceeding of a witness not now available, the subject matter or issues must be the same, or substantially the same; 75 where such is the case and the other requisites as to the admissibility of former testimony are met, the evidence is admissible. 76 On the other hand, the testimony or deposition in a former trial or proceeding of a witness not now available is not admissible in the present trial or proceeding where the issues or subject matter are not the same or substantially the same. 77 Whether there is substantial identity of issues is a preliminary factual question for determination by the court. 78

The requirement that there be a substantial identity of issues, sometimes referred to as "the substantially the same test," does not require that all the issues in the two proceedings be the same, but, at most, that the issue on which the testimony was offered in the first suit must be the same as the issue upon which it is offered in the second. 79 The issues in the two proceedings must be sufficiently similar to insure that the opposing party had a meaningful opportunity to cross-examine when the testimony was first offered. 80

◆ Observation: The requirement of identity of issues should not be stated as a mechanical requirement, but rather as a requirement that the issues in the first proceeding, and hence the purpose for which the testimony was there offered, must be such that the present opponent or some person in interest had an adequate motive for testing on cross-examination the credibility of the testimony now offered. 81

Even though there may be some issues which are not the same in both actions, the testimony in a former action of a subsequently unavailable witness is admissible in a later action, where the testimony is offered on an issue which is the same in both actions. 82 Where the requirement of the identity of subject matter or issues is satisfied, the fact that the causes of action may be different, 83 or that the form of action has been changed, 84 or that there has been a nominal change in parties or counts, 85 is immaterial.

The rule of admissibility where the issues or subject matter are the same has been applied in the situation where there were two trials of the same case, 86 even though the theory of law at the second trial was or might have been different. 87 In a few cases, it has been held that a subsequently deceased party's testimony given at the first trial of a case is admissible at a second trial, 88 even though there is an amendment to the pleadings or a new pleading is substituted, 89 where the issues or subject matter are the same or substantially the same. It has also been held that the deposition or testimony of a witness, now unavailable, taken at the hearing on a motion or petition for a new trial is admissible at a retrial of the case upon the same issue. 90

§ 902 --In criminal cases

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The rule applicable to civil proceedings generally, respecting the necessity for identity of issues between the former proceeding from which the testimony was taken and the instant action where its admissibility is drawn in issue, 91 applies to criminal proceedings. Thus, the crime charged and the issues involved at the subsequent trial must be the same or substantially the same as those involved at the preliminary hearing or former trial. 92

Different crimes, or different degrees of the same crime, based on the same act may be sufficiently similar to make testimony at a preliminary examination of the accused when charged with one offense admissible at the trial of the other, provided the other requisites for admission are established. 93 The following crimes, based upon the same conduct, have been regarded as sufficiently similar: assault with intent to kill, and murder; 94 assault and battery, and murder; 95 rape and murder; 96 murder and manslaughter; 97 murder and robbery; 98 larceny and embezzlement; 99 liquor law violation and bribery; 1 and violation of a city gambling ordinance and a state gambling statute. 2 However, the offense of accessory before the fact to murder has been found distinct from the offense of aiding and abetting the same murder. 3

The fact that a preliminary examination before commitment included charges for offenses in addition to that for which the defendant is on trial does not prevent use of testimony given at that examination, if the part reproduced is limited to such portion as bears out the accusation before the court. 4

§ 902 --In criminal cases [SUPPLEMENT]Case authorities:

The trial court did not err in a prosecution for attempted rape and first-degree murder by admitting evidence of another rape to which defendant pled guilty, where the similarity between the two crimes, closely connected temporally, clearly supports the admission of the other rape to prove identity and intent. N.C.G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 404(b). State v Carter (1994) 338 NC 569, 451 SE2d 157.

The trial court did err in a first- degree murder resentencing hearing by allowing a codefendant's testimony from a prior trial to be read into evidence where the codefendant had asserted his privilege against self-incrimination. Whether this evidence was admissible under GS § 8C-1, Rule 804 is not controlling; defendant was not awarded a new trial but a new capital sentencing hearing. GS § 15A- 2000(a)(3) expressly provides that evidence presented during the guilt determination phase of a capital case is competent and admissible as a matter of law during a capital sentencing proceeding. State v McLaughlin (1995) 341 NC 426, 462 SE2d 1.

§ 903 Motive and opportunity for cross-examination

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Under the Federal Rules of Evidence, and the Uniform Rules of Evidence, the former testimony of an unavailable witness is admissible if the party against whom the testimony is now offered, or in a civil action or proceeding, a predecessor in interest, had an opportunity and similar motive to develop the testimony by direct, cross, or redirect examination. 5 This cross-examination requirement operates to screen out those statements which, although made under oath, were not subject to the scrutiny of a party interested in thoroughly testing their validity. 6 The requirement that trial counsel have a sufficient opportunity to test the testimony of an unavailable witness by cross-examination is ordinarily satisfied by showing a similarity of parties and issues. 7

◆ Observation: Representation by the same attorney at both proceedings is not required. 8 In order to admit the former testimony of an unavailable witness against a criminal defendant at trial, the defendant must have been given the opportunity in the prior proceeding to cross-examine the witness with an interest and motive similar to that which he has at trial. 9 Where the prosecution does not have a similar interest and opportunity to develop the testimony at the prior proceeding, such evidence is not admissible. 10

The requirement of a meaningful opportunity to cross-examine is not satisfied where the party against whom the testimony is offered had neither the opportunity 11 nor a similar motive 12 to cross-examine the witness at a previous deposition. The former testimony will be admitted if the motivation to cross-examine was similar, 13 and former testimony will be excluded if the motivation was not similar. 14 Opportunity and motivation to cross-examine the deponent in the first instance are the important factors, rather than the actual extent of cross-examination. 15 Since parties, at times, for tactical or other reasons, may, as with a live witness at trial, choose not to cross-examine, 16 actual cross-examination at the prior hearing or trial is not required; it is necessary merely that the party against whom the testimony is sought to be offered had an adequate opportunity and motive to exercise the right of cross-examination. 17 However, mere opportunity to cross-examine the witness is not enough; there must also be a perceived real need or incentive to thoroughly cross-examine at the time of the deposition. 18

§ 904 --Determination of similarity of motive to cross-examine

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In determining whether the party against whom the evidence is offered had a similar motive to develop the testimony, a court must evaluate not only the similarity of the issues but also the purpose for which the testimony is given. 19 Accordingly, in assessing the similarity of motive, the court must consider whether the party resisting the offered testimony at a pending proceeding had at a prior proceeding an interest of substantially similar intensity to prove or disprove the same side of a substantially similar issue. 20 Circumstances or factors which influence motive to develop testimony include: (1) the type of proceeding in which the testimony is given; 21 (2) trial strategy; (3) the potential parties or financial stakes; and (4) the number of issues and parties. These factors may differ greatly in civil and criminal cases involving the same defendant, and may, in a criminal trial, prohibit the admission, against the defendant, of a deposition previously taken in a civil trial involving the same defendant. 22

State courts have approached the issue of whether a criminal defendant's motive to cross-examine a witness at the preliminary hearing was similar to the motive he would have had to cross-examine, in different ways, the witness at trial. 23 According to one view, defense attorneys never have similar motives to cross-examine at both preliminary hearings and trials. 24 Another view holds that defense attorneys always have similar motives to cross-examine at preliminary hearings and trials. 25 Others hold that the motives of the defense attorney, at preliminary hearings and trials, must be compared on a case-by-case basis. 26

§ 905 --In criminal proceedings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The use of a former witness' testimony is not violative of the accused's constitutional right to be confronted with witnesses against him or her if, at the preliminary hearing or former trial, the accused had been accorded an adequate opportunity to cross-examine such witness. 27 A court will not impute to a defendant who flees before trial knowledge that he waived his right to cross-examine witnesses against him. 28

The requirement that the party against whom the evidence is to be admitted must have been able to conduct cross-examination at the former proceeding is generally satisfied if the former testimony comes from another hearing of the same criminal proceeding, such as before a grand jury if the hearsay testimony is offered against the government, 29 or from a prior trial of the same criminal defendant. 30 A preliminary hearing affords a constitutionally adequate opportunity to cross-examine opposing witnesses, especially where extensive cross-examination is conducted by the same counsel who represented the defendant at trial, and the hearing is conducted before a judicial tribunal equipped to provide a judicial record of the hearing. 31 However, a transcript of a plea bargain is not admissible. 32 And transcripts of prior state prosecutions have been excluded from federal prosecutions on the ground that the federal government had no opportunity to cross-examine in the state proceedings. 33

A defendant is not entitled, under the Confrontation Clause, to a cross-examination that is effective in whatever way and to whatever extent defense might wish. 34 If a party against whom the testimony is now offered is the one against whom the testimony was offered previously, no unfairness is apparent in requiring the party to accept his own prior conduct of cross-examination or decision not to cross-examine. Consequently, the court's inquiry under focuses not on the extent of cross-examination at the former proceeding but on whether the party's handling of the testimony was meaningful in light of the circumstances which prevailed when the former testimony was offered. 35

§ 905 --In criminal proceedings [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court did err in a first- degree murder resentencing hearing by allowing a codefendant's testimony from a prior trial to be read into evidence where the codefendant had asserted his privilege against self-incrimination. Whether this evidence was admissible under GS § 8C-1, Rule 804 is not controlling; defendant was not awarded a new trial but a new capital sentencing hearing. GS § 15A- 2000(a)(3) expressly provides that evidence presented during the guilt determination phase of a capital case is competent and admissible as a matter of law during a capital sentencing proceeding. State v McLaughlin (1995) 341 NC 426, 462 SE2d 1.

b. Unavailability of Witness [906-923]

(1). In General [906, 907]

§ 906 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

In order to establish a right to introduce the testimony of a witness given at a former trial, it is incumbent upon the proponent of such evidence to lay a proper foundation for its introduction by showing the unavailability of the witness who gave the testimony sought to be produced. 36 Generally, former testimony is not admissible unless the declarant is unavailable because the opportunity to observe the demeanor of the witness gives depth and meaning to the testimony. 37

The determination as to whether a proper foundation has been laid demonstrating the unavailability of a witness is at the discretion of the trial judge. 38 In determining unavailability, the focus is not on the unavailability of the witness per se, but on the unavailability of his or her testimony, 39 at the time the former testimony is to be admitted in evidence. 40 A witness may be physically present in the courtroom and still be unavailable. 41

For a witness to be unavailable, it must be practically impossible to produce the witness in court. 42 It is not enough to show that the witness would be uncomfortable on the stand or that testifying would be stressful. 43 Further, the unavailability of a witness cannot be premised solely on the fact that the proponent of the testimony does not feel that the declarant's presence is necessary. 44 The "witness unavailable" exception to the hearsay rule is not applicable when the unavailability of the witness is due solely to a limit imposed by the court. 45

§ 906 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

If artist's estate asserts New York Dead Man's Statute, art dealer will become "unavailable" within meaning of FRE 804(a) to testify about her dealings with deceased artist, and her testimony from first trial—in which estate waived Statute—will be admissible at this retrial, where dealer sues on alleged failure of artist to deliver 3 paintings promised, because Federal Rules of Evidence govern hearsay problems in federal court even when state law supplies rule of decision, under FRE 101 and 1101. Rosenfeld v Basquiat (1994, SD NY) 866 F Supp 790.

In prosecution for assault, trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to admit statement of unavailable witness made to defense counsel where statement was made approximately 16 months after incident, statement was handwritten by defense counsel, and it elicited only favorable information. State v Smith (1994) 35 Conn App 51, 644 A2d 923.

The burden of satisfying the court of the validity of the excuse for nonproduction of a witness lies upon the party seeking to introduce the prior testimony. 46 It must be shown that some circumstance exists by reason of which the witness who gave the testimony at the former trial cannot be produced as a witness, or cannot be made to testify, at the second trial. 47

The sufficiency of the proof to establish the unavailability of a witness is largely within the discretion of the trial court, 48 and, in the absence of a showing that such discretion has been abused, its decision will not be interfered with on appeal. 49 The trial court abuses its discretion only if its decision is outside the zone of reasonable disagreement. 50 Generally, it is within the discretion of the trial court to accept or reject counsel's representation on unavailability of a witness. 51

A higher standard of proof of unavailability is required in criminal cases than is in civil cases. 52 But it has been held that the prosecution must prove the witness' unavailability by a preponderance of the evidence, and not to a complete certainty. 53 For the purposes of the Sixth Amendment confrontation clause, the prosecution bears the burden of establishing that a witness is unavailable to testify at trial, despite good-faith efforts, undertaken prior to trial, to locate and present that witness. 54

(2). Reasons for Unavailability [908-923]

§ 908 Generally

View Entire Section

Where statutes enumerate the grounds upon proof of which the testimony of a witness at a former trial or proceeding may be introduced in evidence, it is necessary to establish one of the enumerated grounds. 55 A declarant is unavailable 56 as a witness under the Uniform and Federal Rules of Evidence if the declarant: (1) is exempted, by a court ruling, on the ground of privilege, from testifying concerning the subject matter of the declarant's statement; 57 (2) persists in refusing to testify concerning the subject matter of the declarant's statement despite an order of the court to do so; 58 (3) testifies to a lack of memory of the subject matter of the declarant's statement; 59 (4) is unable to be present or to testify at the hearing because of death 60 then existing physical or mental illness or infirmity; 61 or (5) is absent from the hearing and the proponent of the statement has been unable to procure the declarant's attendance by process or other reasonable means. 62

§ 908 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Trial court did not err in determining that witness for state was unavailable for trial and thus that witness' previously transcribed testimony from preliminary hearing was admissible. Outside presence of jury, court conducted rather extensive hearing to determine whether state's witness was actually unavailable, and whether state had exercised due diligence in its efforts to locate witness. Hearing included testimony of witness' mother, his girlfriend, investigator for state, and jailer for city. Witness had murder charge, unconnected with case at bar, pending against him and had recently escaped from jail. Each person who testified to witness' unavailability indicated that each had made efforts to locate him, but that he could not be found. Johnson v State (1993, Ala App) 623 So 2d 444.

It is generally agreed that the testimony of a witness since deceased, given at a former trial or proceeding in which the witness was under oath, cross-examined, or where there was opportunity for cross-examination, is admissible in evidence in a subsequent trial of the same action or proceeding. 63 This approach has been adopted by the Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence, 64 and has been applied to criminal proceedings. 65

§ 909 ----Death [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Affidavit by since-deceased deputy police chief, that police chief had mentioned that his philosophy was to weed out older employees, should not have been admitted in police officer's age discrimination suit; affidavit did not indicate context, times, or locations of police chief's alleged statements, city did not have opportunity to cross-examine affiant, and affidavit contained no information to substantiate affiant's belief that chief wanted to promote younger employees. Stokes v City of Omaha (1994, CA8 Neb) 23 F3d 1362, 64 BNA FEP Cas 1107.

In murder prosecution involving juvenile being tried as adult, trial court did not err in admitting, during punishment phase, testimony of psychologist given in juvenile certification hearing. Psychologist had died during interim, and defendant had been afforded opportunity and had had similar motive to cross-examine psychologist at certification hearing; identity of motive was not required. Coffin v State (1994, Tex Crim) 885 SW2d 140.

Where two of the witnesses for the government at the former trial of an indictment for murder have since died, a transcribed copy of the reporter's stenographic notes of their testimony at such trial, supported by his testimony that it was correct, is admissible in evidence against the accused on the second trial of the indictment. Mattox v United States, 156 US 237, 39 L Ed 409, 15 S Ct 337.

In a prosecution for possession of a controlled substance, preliminary hearing testimony previously given by the arresting officer was properly admitted at trial where the officer, who was the only witness to testify at the preliminary hearing, was killed in an automobile accident two days after the hearing and the state would have been unable to prove its case at trial if it had been barred from using the officer's preliminary hearing testimony. State v Ricks (App) 122 Idaho 856, 840 P2d 400.

The rather unusual contention was made in a Texas case that the state could not put into evidence the testimony of a deceased witness for the reason that it was the state itself which made it impossible for the witness to testify at the trial by ordering his electrocution as punishment for a crime committed by him. In this case, an accomplice of the accused testified at the first trial of the accused but was electrocuted by the state prior to the second trial of the accused. It was held that his testimony was admissible on behalf of the state as the testimony of a person since deceased. Abston v State, 139 Tex Crim 416, 141 SW2d 337.

§ 910 --Proof

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The death of a witness must be proved as a fact before evidence of a witness taken at a prior trial may be admitted. 66 A death certificate provides the proper foundation to admit the preliminary hearing testimony of a witness who had died before trial. 67 In addition, the death of the witness may be stipulated by the parties. 68

A claim that the plaintiff knew "from general repute" that the witness was dead is not sufficient to establish that fact so as to permit the introduction of the testimony given by the witness at a former trial. 69 Moreover, the mere return of a subpoena showing that the witness could not be found or is dead is insufficient to justify the admission of evidence given at a former trial. 70

§ 911 Loss of memory

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

While it has been held that the mere fact that a witness who is not mentally incapacitated has forgotten the facts to which he formerly testified, or that he fails to recollect particular facts, does not furnish a ground for the admission of proof of his testimony given at a former trial, 71 under the modern view adopted by the Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence, if the declarant testifies to a lack of memory of the subject matter of his or her statement during testimony in a prior proceeding, the declarant is considered unavailable. 72 A witness' claim of lack of memory will generally be deemed sufficient if supported by corroborating circumstances. 73

◆ Observation: The consistency or inconsistency of earlier testimony with a witness' subsequent loss of memory becomes irrelevant where the witness testifies to a lack of memory as to a material portion of the subject matter of the prior testimony. 74

§ 912 Physical or mental illness

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

If the declarant is unable to be present or testify at the hearing because of an existing physical ⁷⁵ or mental ⁷⁶ illness or infirmity, ⁷⁷ the declarant is considered unavailable. ⁷⁸ This view is followed by the Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence. ⁷⁹

Where the unavailability of a witness is caused by an incapacitating physical or mental condition existing at trial, the illness or infirmity must be of comparative severity, and it must exist to such a degree as to render the witness' attendance or his testifying relatively impossible, and not merely inconvenient. ⁸⁰ Mere passing discomfort or inconvenience does not satisfy statutory requirements governing the admissibility of hearsay evidence or the confrontation clause. ⁸¹

The existence of the infirmity should be established by the testimony of a medical witness⁸² or by affidavit.⁸³ Allegations that the witness is hospitalized are not enough where the party seeking to introduce the prior testimony is unable to demonstrate that the witness is too sick to testify at trial.⁸⁴ Likewise, uncorroborated statements made by defense counsel, that the defendant's witness is unavailable to testify due to her child's illness, are, of themselves, insufficient to demonstrate unavailability of the witness. 85

A witness is unavailable, under the rule allowing admission of testimony of a witness from a prior proceeding, 86 if a party cannot locate the witness within the jurisdiction. 87 Statutes often regulate the use of former testimony of a witness who is absent from the jurisdiction. 88 Under the Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence, a declarant is unavailable as a witness when he or she is absent from the hearing and the proponent of the statement has been unable to procure the declarant's attendance by process or other reasonable means. 89 There is no requirement that an attempt be made to depose a witness as a precondition to the witness being deemed unavailable, for the purposes of introducing prior testimony under the Federal Rules of Evidence. 90 However, an attempt to depose a witness as a precondition to the witness being deemed unavailable may sometimes be required under state law. 91

§ 915 --Criminal proceedings; requirement of good-faith effort to secure attendance of witness

View Entire Section
Go to Supplement

In criminal cases, a witness is not unavailable, for purposes of the exception to the confrontation requirement for the use of prior reliable testimony, unless the prosecutorial authorities have made a good-faith effort to obtain the witness' presence at trial. 92 Accordingly, a witness is not considered unavailable unless the prosecution has made reasonable efforts in good faith to secure the witness' presence. 93 The test has been described as pretrial, good-faith efforts to locate and present that witness. 94

The prosecution must engage in a diligent search. 95 In a case where the location of a witness is known and is amenable to process, due diligence and good faith requires that the prosecutor use the power of process available under law to bring the witness before court. 96 A foreign citizen outside of the country can be considered unavailable per se without violating the Confrontation Clause where the witness is a foreign citizen not subject to the court's compulsory process. 97 In the case where the location of the witness is not known, good faith requires the prosecutor to take all reasonable initiatives to produce the witness. 98 Unavailability is established by the prosecution where it shows that good-faith, reasonable efforts have been made to produce the witness for trial, but without success. 99

The prosecution's obligation to make a diligent good-faith effort is nondelegable. 1 But if the prosecution relies on out-of-state police to follow particular leads, and the out-of-state police make a diligent good-faith effort to find and produce the witnesses, then their efforts may discharge the prosecution's obligation. 2

The trial court did not err by permitting the State to offer into evidence at defendant's resentencing for first-degree murder the testimony of two witnesses from the first trial. Under *State v. § 916 --Extent of inaccessibility; efforts to secure attendance, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The question whether a witness is inaccessible to an extent sufficient to justify reception of his testimony rendered at a former trial is a preliminary question for determination by the trial court. 3 Where an expert witness is under the control of the offering litigant, due diligence must be used to secure the attendance of the witness at trial. 4

If there is a possibility, albeit remote, that affirmative measures might produce the declarant, the obligation of good faith may demand their effectuation. 5 The reasonableness of the effort necessarily depends on the circumstances shown in the particular case. 6 The determination of whether prosecutorial efforts to secure the presence of a witness were sufficient is within the sound discretion of the trial judge. 7 The determination of due diligence by the trial court will not be overturned on appeal, absent an abuse of discretion. 8

A witness is not considered unavailable simply because he or she cannot be reached by subpoena. 9 The party offering the out-of-court statement of a witness beyond the reach of a subpoena should represent to the court that it made an effort to secure the voluntary attendance of the witness at trial. 10 The mere fact, however, that a witness was not placed under subpoena before he left the jurisdiction has been held not to raise a presumption of bad faith or amount to such lack of diligence as, of itself, to forbid the use of his former testimony. 11 Prior testimony may be admitted where the witness is out of the jurisdiction, effectively precluding service of a subpoena upon the witness. 12 Thus, a patently futile attempt to serve a subpoena on a potential witness in a case where the witness' physical location and address are completely unknown is not required. 13

The Uniform Act To Secure Attendance of Witnesses From Without the State in Criminal

Proceedings provides a mechanism for the production of witnesses, but it is not a substitute for a diligent effort to find witnesses because the certificates sent under the Uniform Act do not obligate local police to undertake a diligent search. 14 However, it has been held that the failure to implement the Uniform Act To Secure Attendance of Witnesses From Without the State in Criminal Proceedings constitutes a failure to exercise reasonable diligence. 15 But failure to implement the Uniform Act has been excused in certain circumstances, 16 and preliminary hearing testimony has been held properly admitted in such cases. 17

§ 918 --Proof

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

If the evidence rendered at a former trial is offered on the theory that the witness is absent from the state or out of the jurisdiction of the court, the proponent must offer competent evidence sufficiently showing the absence of the witness and due diligence in an effort to secure his or her attendance. 18 The burden to prove good faith falls on the prosecution, and the lengths to which the prosecution must go to produce a witness is a question of reasonableness. 19 Proof of mere temporary absence from the state is not sufficient in the absence of a showing of the exercise of a reasonable effort and diligence to produce the witness. 20 Where a witness' location is known, a court will not find unavailability absent a showing that the proponent of the testimony attempted in good faith to obtain the witness' attendance at trial. 21 The best sources of information reasonably accessible should be used to learn whether the witness can be found and made to testify. 22 Conclusory allegations that a witness is outside the jurisdiction of the court are inadequate. 23

§ 919 Imprisonment

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table

The mere fact that the witness is confined to prison does not justify the reproduction of his testimony under the hearsay exception permitting the introduction of evidence given at a former trial or proceeding, if there is ample provision or opportunity for obtaining his testimony. 24 Thus, one serving a term of years in the state penitentiary is not civilly dead, and such confinement is not a sufficient basis for the introduction of his testimony given at a former trial. 25 Moreover, in the case of a declarant who is incarcerated in a federal penitentiary, once the court agrees to issue a writ of habeas corpus to secure the prisoner's presence, the unavailability requirement is no longer met. 26 On the other hand, evidence from a prior proceeding is admissible upon a good-faith showing that the witness has escaped from jail. 27

§ 920 Refusal to testify

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Under the Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence, a declarant is unavailable as a witness where the declarant persists in refusing to testify concerning the subject matter of the declarant's statement despite an order of the court to do so. 28 A state court interpreting a similar state statute has held that this rule does not require a court to ascertain the specific reasons behind a refusal to testify before a witness may be declared unavailable, nor does it provide that a witness be declared unavailable only upon a showing of good and valuable reasons for failure to testify. 29 Moreover, the rule does not place an affirmative duty on the state to elicit the reasons behind a witness' refusal to testify. 30

Under a state statutory provision providing that the testimony of a witness at trial is admissible in a subsequent, related proceeding if the witness is unable to attend because of "incapacity," a witness' refusal to testify constituted incapacity where the County Court made sufficient good-faith efforts, including a threat to cite the witness for contempt, to induce the witness to testify in person at trial. 31 On the other hand, a state statutory provision authorizing the use of former testimony where a witness is deceased, insane, out of the jurisdiction, or cannot be found with due diligence, has been held not to authorize the admission of former testimony of a witness who is present at a later trial but refuses to testify for fear of self-incrimination. 32

§ 920 ----Refusal to testify [SUPPLEMENT]Case authorities:

In drug prosecution, witness' testimony from preliminary hearing would not be admitted, even though witness steadfastly refused to testify at defendant's trial, notwithstanding commonwealth's offer of use immunity or court's order compelling testimony, finding witness in contempt of order and sentencing him to 1 year in prison, and determination that commonwealth exercised all reasonable efforts to compel witness' live testimony at trial; defendant did not have full and fair opportunity to cross-examine witness at preliminary hearing, where prosecution had not disclosed witness' prior criminal history or pending criminal charges, defendant did not have opportunity to impeach witness, who was only eyewitness to alleged drug transaction, and defendant did not have opportunity to explore witness' reasons for ultimately testifying at preliminary hearing. Commonwealth v Smith (1994, Pa Super) 647 A2d 907.

In prosecution for aggravated sexual assault and possession of child pornography, admission at trial of transcript of testimony of seven-year-old from bond revocation hearing was not abuse of discretion after child refused to answer questions at trial, even though defendant alleged that motive to develop child's testimony at hearing was not similar to what it would be at trial, where evidence and argument at bond hearing demonstrated that central disputed factual issue, whether defendant in fact sexually assaulted two complainants, was identical in both proceedings; in addition, even if prior testimony had been inadmissible, objection was waived by failure to object to admission. § 921 --Claim of privilege

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The use of testimony given by a witness at a former trial or preliminary examination of an accused on trial is generally held permissible, even though the witness is present in court at the later trial, if the witness refuses to testify on the ground of a recognized privilege. 33

Under the Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence, a declarant is unavailable as a witness where the declarant is exempted by ruling of the court, on the ground of privilege from testifying concerning the subject matter of the declarant's statement. 34 The use of testimony given by a witness at a former trial or preliminary examination of an accused on trial is generally held permissible, even though the witness is present in court at the later trial if, having been granted immunity, the witness refuses to testify and is cited for contempt. 35

Evidence by the spouse of the defendant, 36 or by a codefendant or accomplice, 37 given at a preliminary hearing or former trial, may be presented from a secondary source where such witness, at the later trial of the defendant, claims the privilege of refusing to testify. A grant of immunity to a witness has been held to bar the use of his former testimony for other than impeachment purposes, however, since he can then be compelled to testify, 38 but there is also authority to the contrary in this respect. 39

A witness is unavailable if he claims his privilege against self incrimination. 40

If a witness retains his Fifth Amendment privilege after testifying before a grand jury, the defendant is entitled to introduce the witness' grand jury testimony before the trial jury. 41

◆ Practice guide: A requirement that the witness assert his privilege against self-incrimination in the court's presence does not necessarily mean that the witness must claim the privilege in the presence of the jury, since claims of privilege are to be determined outside the presence of the jury, and if the court determines that the prior statement is admissible, then the jury should simply be told that the witness is not available before the prior testimony is read into the record. 42

§ 921 --Claim of privilege [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Prior statements of witness who, asserting Fifth Amendment privilege, was sworn in but refused to testify at defendant's trial were not admissible, as witness was not unavailable, and statements were not against witness' penal interest, in that they did not directly subject him to criminal responsibility. State v Johnson-Howell (1994) 255 Kan 928, 881 P2d 1288.

The trial court did err in a first- degree murder resentencing hearing by allowing a codefendant's testimony from a prior trial to be read into evidence where the codefendant had asserted his privilege against self-incrimination. Whether this evidence was admissible under GS § 8C-1, Rule 804 is not controlling; defendant was not awarded a new trial but a new capital sentencing hearing. GS § 15A- 2000(a)(3) expressly provides that evidence presented during the guilt determination phase of a capital case is competent and admissible as a matter of law during a capital sentencing proceeding. State v McLaughlin (1995) 341 NC 426, 462 SE2d 1.

§ 922 Subsequent disqualification as witness

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

There is a difference of opinion as to whether the testimony of a witness given at a former trial may be introduced in evidence when the witness subsequently becomes incompetent as a witness by reason of the death of a person interested in the transaction concerning which he testified. 43 According to the rule in some jurisdictions, if, by reason of the death of a party, the witness becomes incompetent to testify at the subsequent proceeding to which a privy of such deceased party is a party, the testimony given at the first trial may be proved at the second trial by the evidence of other witnesses. 44 It has been said that when such evidence is offered, it is not testimony that could have been fabricated after the death of the adverse party whose interests might be injuriously affected thereby, since, when taken, the parties stood on an equal footing and each had the right to perpetuate his own testimony. 45 Some courts, however, hold that the former testimony cannot be introduced in such a case. 46

Except in certain cases where the adverse party in interest is an executor or administrator, the common-law disqualification of a witness by reason of his interest in the outcome of the action has been removed by statute in this country. 47

§ 923 Unavailability by reason of fault or procurement of party

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The hearsay exception permitting the introduction of evidence given at a former trial or proceeding 48 is not applicable if the declarant has been made unavailable as a witness due to the procurement or wrongdoing of the proponent of a statement made for the purpose of preventing the witness from attending or testifying. 49 Thus, in a criminal prosecution, if a witness is absent due to procurement or connivance of the accused, the testimony which the witness gave at a former trial or at the preliminary hearing of the accused is admissible. 50 A nexus between the proponent's intentional act and the witness' refusal to testify must be established. 51 Despite the general rules, however, where the absence of a witness in a criminal case is by procurement of the prosecution, the trial court will protect the defendant and refuse to permit the use of the former testimony. 52 The trial court will also refuse to permit the use of former testimony where the negligence of the prosecution leads to the absence of a witness. 53

3. Mode of Proof of Former Testimony [924-933]

a. In General [924-928]

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table Go to Supplement

So far as the mode or method of proof is concerned, there is little essential distinction between the proof in criminal and in civil cases. Most courts regard former testimony of a witness provable by oral testimony of other witnesses who were present at the former hearing or trial, heard him testify, and remember the testimony, 54 even though minutes or notes of such testimony were taken at the former trial or hearing. 55 Some courts regard proof by notes or transcript as a permissible cumulative or alternative method of proof. 56 As in the case of any testimony, the weight to be accorded reproduced testimony is for the jury to determine. 57

§ 924 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Where defendant had opportunity to cross-examine trial witness at preliminary hearing, witness' preliminary hearing statement is admissible at trial if witness is unavailable, despite good faith efforts of prosecution to produce witness. Reed v City & County of Honolulu (1994) 76 Hawaii 219, 873 P2d 98.

§ 925 Proof by oral testimony

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The general rule, in both criminal 58 and civil cases, 59 is that the testimony at a former trial or hearing of a witness who cannot be produced at the subsequent trial may be proved by the oral testimony of any person who was present at the former trial and heard the witness testify, such as a spectator, a judge before whom the trial was had, a committing magistrate, a juror, a stenographer, or an attorney. Before a witness may be allowed to testify concerning the testimony of a witness at a former trial, a proper foundation must first be laid by showing that the witness at the present trial not only had the opportunity to hear such former testimony, but that he professes to remember the substance of the entire testimony as to the particular matter for which the former testimony is sought to be introduced. 60 A witness by whom former testimony is thus sought to be proved must testify from memory without reliance, except by way of refreshing his recollection, upon records or writings which in themselves would have been incompetent evidence to prove such former testimony. 61

In the absence of a court record of the testimony of the defendant in a prosecution for false swearing at a former trial, it is competent to prove the matters to which he testified at the former trial, by the official court reporter, or any other witness who heard him testify on the former trial; the reporter is privileged to refresh her recollection by reference to any memorandum she may have made. § 926 --Sufficiency of reproducing substance of testimony

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In both civil 62 and criminal cases, the witness testifying as to former testimony need not reproduce the exact or precise words of the former witness; it is sufficient for the witness to state the substance of the former testimony. 63

◆ Practice guide: An opposing party may cross-examine the offered witness, in the absence of the jury, if so desired, in order to test his ability to remember accurately and relate truthfully the testimony sought to be produced by him. 64

While it is sufficient for a witness to state the substance of former testimony which he or she heard, the witness must state the whole substance of the whole of the former witness' testimony, or at the least the substance of the whole testimony on the particular point or issue involved in the previous trial, including both testimony given on the direct examination and testimony given on the cross-examination. 65 Thus, the person who seeks to relate the testimony of the witness must be capable of stating the subject matter of the prior witness' testimony with clarity and detail. 66 If one called to testify as to what a witness testified at a former trial does not recollect what the latter had said on cross-examination, such testimony is not competent and should be excluded. 67

§ 927 --Effect of existence of written record

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The view followed by most courts, both in civil 68 and criminal 69 cases, is that parol proof is admissible to prove former testimony even though stenographic notes or other written records of such testimony exist. There is also, however, authority for the view that the written record is the best evidence to prove the former testimony, and that parol proof of it is inadmissible. 70 However, the rule that in the case of recorded testimony stenographer's notes or transcript constitute the best evidence of prior statements has no applicability where the object is not to prove the truth of the statements contained in it, but merely to show such inconsistencies as bearing upon the general credibility of a witness, or for the purpose of laying a proper foundation for impeachment by introduction of contradictory matter in due course of events. 71

Statutes requiring the testimony of witnesses to be reduced to writing do not necessarily preclude, under the best evidence rule, the introduction of parol testimony in a subsequent trial to prove such former testimony. Rather, such statutes have sometimes been construed as merely providing for a cumulative mode of proof. 72

§ 928 Bill of exceptions

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The view has been followed, in both criminal 73 and civil 74 cases, that a bill of exceptions, prepared at a former trial for the purpose of an appeal from the judgment rendered in that trial, may be used as evidence to prove the testimony of a witness at that trial. However, there is also authority for the view that a bill of exceptions is not admissible in evidence for this purpose in criminal 75 or civil 76 cases.

b. Proof by Transcript, Notes, or Other Writing or Recording [929-933]

§ 929 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Although there is some authority to the contrary, ⁷⁷ several courts follow the view that in civil cases, official or court reporters' or stenographers' notes or transcripts are competent evidence to prove the former testimony of a witness, ⁷⁸ and may, after due authentication and proper proof of their accuracy by the reporter or stenographer, ⁷⁹ be read to the jury as evidence. ⁸⁰ Under the Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence, testimony by a witness with knowledge that a matter is what it is claimed to be fulfills the requirement of authentication or identification. ⁸¹ Further, it is provided in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure that whenever the testimony of a witness at a trial or hearing which was stenographically reported is admissible in evidence at a later trial, it may be proved by the transcript of it duly certified by the person who reported the testimony. ⁸²

It has been held that statutes making official stenographic reports of the evidence prima facie proof of their correctness have the effect of rendering admissible in evidence such reports, in order to prove the testimony of a witness at a former trial, ⁸³ but there is also authority to the contrary. ⁸⁴

Generally, in criminal cases, the former testimony of a witness may be proved by the stenographer or official reporter, or a properly verified copy or transcript of the evidence, by having the same read to the jury by such stenographer or reporter, after the stenographer testifies as to the correctness or accuracy of the notes or the transcript. ⁸⁵ It is not an essential prerequisite that a transcript of the evidence taken at a preliminary examination be filed with the court clerk in order to render it admissible in evidence, even if that is required by statute in the case of a deposition. ⁸⁶ Although there is some authority to the contrary, ⁸⁷ in most cases, the admission in evidence of stenographic notes, or transcripts thereof, or other writings to prove the testimony of a former witness, is not violative of the constitutional provision entitling the accused to the right of confrontation of witnesses against him, where the accused has already had the opportunity at the preliminary trial to be confronted with the former witness and to cross-examine him. 88 In a few criminal cases, however, usually because of particular circumstances, the official stenographer's or reporter's notes or transcript thereof have not been permitted to be read in evidence to prove the testimony of a witness given at a former trial. 89

§ 929 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

District court properly refused to admit 12 statements ATF agent had taken during his investigation that failed to mention defendant in connection with drug ring; raw interview transcripts were not factual findings and had no indicia of reliability or trustworthiness, and there was no reason to believe that absence of defendant's mention was factual finding or sufficiently trustworthy to allow it to be admitted. United States v D'Anjou (1994, CA4 NC) 16 F3d 604, cert den (US) 1994 US LEXIS 4999.

In manslaughter prosecution, trial court did not err in admitting tape recording of defendant's incriminating statement to police where prosecutor laid proper foundation under "pictorial communication" theory, by which qualified and competent witness testified that sound recording accurately and reliably represented what witness sensed at time in question. Ex parte Fuller (1993, Ala) 620 So 2d 675.

In workers' compensation proceeding relating to teacher's claim for work-related mental injuries arising out allegations of sexual misconduct, ultimately resulting in teacher's termination by board of education, workers' compensation commissioner did not abuse his discretion in disallowing transcript of testimony of former student given at teacher's termination hearing. Director of pupil services for school system, who testified to unavailability of former student, stated that his "search" for former student had consisted of two telephone calls to two unidentified secretaries at schools outside state. He testified that witness had moved to New Hampshire, but he did not do anything further to determine her availability. Witness residing in another state is not unavailable for that reason alone, and there was no showing whether jurisdiction in which witness allegedly resided had statute or common law process relating to attendance of witnesses in other states. Crochiere v Board of Educ. (1993) 227 Conn 333, 630 A2d 1027, related proceeding (Conn Super) 1993 Conn Super LEXIS 3188.

Trial court in drug prosecution properly admitted transcribed suppression-hearing testimony of witness who testified at hearing for defendant, where issues and parties of both suppression hearing and subsequent trial were identical. Williams v State (1994) 214 Ga App 280, 447 SE2d 676, 94 Fulton County D R 2700, reconsideration den (Jul 29, 1994).

The prior testimony of a prosecution witness at a preliminary hearing was properly admitted into evidence to rebut the defendant's inference of recent fabrication and to rehabilitate the witness where (1) on direct examination, the witness acknowledged that he had signed an affidavit in which he recanted his statement to police and his preliminary hearing testimony and stated that he signed the affidavit out of fear and that the contents of the affidavit were false, and (2) on cross examination, defense counsel used the affidavit to attack the witness's credibility. Commonwealth v Murphy (1995, Pa) 657 A2d 927.

§ 932 Sound recording or videotape of former witness

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Sound recorded or videotaped testimony is admissible to prove the testimony of a witness who is now unavailable. In criminal cases, the court acts in good faith and properly admits into evidence videotaped testimony of a prosecution witness who appears to be unable to testify at trial where the accuracy and integrity of the videotape is not questioned, the taping is under the control and supervision of the trial judge and in the presence of the defendant and his attorney, and the defense attorney is given an unimpeded opportunity to cross-examine the witness. ² On the other hand, the transcript of a preliminary hearing is inadmissible where the transcript is made from an electronic recording of a hearing at which no reporter is present, since, when a transcriber prepares a transcript from such a recording, he is not relying upon his notes or his recollection, but only upon a recording that he is in no better position than anyone else to interpret. ³

Where a witness in a prior proceeding has died, the party seeking admission of a tape recording must prove that the tape or witness testifying on the basis of the tape can substantially reproduce the prior testimony of the deceased witness in all material particulars. 4

§ 933 Authentication of writing or recording

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

To permit the admission in evidence, in criminal 5 or civil 6 cases, of stenographic notes or transcripts of stenographic notes or other records or recordings, to prove the testimony of a witness at a former trial or hearing, it is necessary that a proper foundation be laid for their admission by proof as to their correctness and accuracy in reproducing the evidence and by identification of the contents of such notes as the evidence given at the former trial.

◆ Practice guide: There is no error in admitting into evidence a transcript of former testimony without proof of its correctness where an objection to its lack of authentication is not made when the transcript is sought to be admitted. 7 This is particularly true under statutory provisions providing for the admission of such evidence. 8 Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, whenever the testimony of a witness at a trial or hearing which was stenographically reported is admissible in evidence at a later trial, it may be proved by the transcript of it duly certified by the person who reported the testimony. 9

◆ Observation: Under the Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence, the requirement of authentication or identification is satisfied by evidence sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question is what its proponent claims it to be. 10

Transcripts of police officer's testimony were admissible where, although better method of authentication would have been to have court reporter who transcribed them testify as to their authenticity, foregoing was impossible in this case because reporter was bedridden, where act of turning over copy of minutes to defendant constituted sufficient act of validation to render transcript admissible, and where transcripts were also submitted to the court by the People on their prior appeal and the People thereby attested to the accuracy of the transcripts. § 934 Generally

View Entire Section

Proof which is addressed directly to the senses of the court or the jury without interposing the testimony of witnesses is generally characterized as visual, real, or demonstrative evidence. 11 Real or demonstrative evidence is admissible both in civil 12 and criminal 13 cases if it tends to solve some issue in the case and is relevant to the case. 14 While real or demonstrative evidence comprises a comparatively small proportion of the evidence ordinarily produced in the trial of a case, it is a most convincing and satisfactory class of proof, and its importance in the determination of controversies is relatively great. 15 Evidence of this character includes objects or articles brought into court and exhibited to the court and jury, 16 photographs, X-ray pictures, motion pictures and videotapes, 17 maps, diagrams, drawings, and models, 18 fingerprints, palmprints, and footprints, 19 the exhibition of one's person or body, 20 and experiments, demonstrations, or tests conducted either in or out of court. 21

§ 934 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In a prosecution for the murder of a mother and daughter, both of whom were stabbed dozens of times with a knife and scissors, the Commonwealth was properly permitted to introduce into evidence a scissors and 2 knives seized from the home of the defendant's mother pursuant to a search warrant, even though those items could not be specifically linked to the murders, where the physician who conducted the autopsies of the victims testified that the scissors and one of the knives were consistent with the wounds inflicted on the victims and an officer who executed the search warrant testified that he saw the defendant in the bedroom and kitchen of his mother's house, which were the rooms from which the items were seized. § 935 Balancing probative value against particular dangers in admitting evidence; discretion of court

View Entire Section
Go to Supplement

Courts favor the use of accurate and relevant demonstrative evidence to help the jury better understand the issues in the case. 22 Demonstrative evidence need only be sufficiently explanatory or illustrative of relevant testimony in the case to be of potential help to the trier of fact. 23 Accordingly, exhibits used for demonstration purposes are admissible if they supplement the witness' spoken description of the transpired event, 24 clarify some issue in the case, 25 and if the probative value of the exhibit outweighs the likelihood of improperly influencing the minds of the jury. 26 An exhibit should be excluded where the purpose of the exhibit is to inflame the minds of the jury or excite the feelings of the jury rather than to enlighten the jury as to any fact. 27 In other words, when demonstrative evidence is likely to confuse the jury, raise collateral issues, or is more prejudicial than probative, the court should refuse its admission. 28 "Prejudicial," in this regard, does not mean detrimental to a party's case but rather an undue tendency to suggest a decision on an improper basis. 29 However, the admission of other evidence does not prohibit the use of demonstrative evidence which has probative value in establishing conditions and corroboration of witnesses on the issues of the case. 30 Ultimately, the admissibility of demonstrative evidence is a matter within the discretion of the trial court, 31 and the trial court's ruling will not be disturbed absent a clear showing that the trial court has abused that discretion. 32

§ 935 ----Balancing probative value against particular dangers in admitting evidence; discretion of court [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: To tell the truth: Accuracy in demonstrative evidence, 5 Prac Litig 3:47 (1994).

Case authorities:

Admission of sawed-off shotgun in defendant's trial on drug charges was unwarranted since it was not involved in crimes charged and potentially inflammatory, but was harmless in light of overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. United States v Thomas (1995, CA6 Ohio) 49 F3d 253.

A witness's testimony which described acts of prostitution between the witness and defendant and her finding a metal pipe under defendant's pillow a month before the death of the victim, a known prostitute, was properly admitted in defendant's murder trial to show that the pipe was in defendant's bedroom in reasonable proximity to the time of the victim's death where other evidence tended to show that the victim was killed by a blunt object, such as a pipe, and since defendant's confession indicated that he had thrown a pipe away prior to the victim's death. Furthermore, the trial court did not err by finding that this testimony was more probative than prejudicial under the balancing test of Rule 403. N.C.G.S. § 8C-1, Rules 403 and 404(b). State v Weathers (1994) 339 NC 441, 451 SE2d 266.

2. Objects or Articles, In General [936-949]

a. In General [936-944]

§ 936 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

When a fact in issue may be explained by the production of an article or object to which the testimony relates, the article or object may be brought into court and exhibited to the jury if the circumstances permit. 33 Whenever it is necessary to show the condition or quality of a certain article or substance, the thing itself is the most powerful evidence that can be produced, and it may be introduced in evidence as supplementing the testimony of witnesses or as direct evidence when properly identified. 34 Things may be exhibited to the jurors in order that they may obtain clearer views and be able to reach sounder conclusions, 35 and this course is viewed as more effective than a description by the witnesses. 36 However, the admission of physical evidence is governed by the same rules of relevancy and materiality as govern admission of testimonial evidence, 37 and an object or article is not admissible for demonstrative purposes when it does not illustrate or make clearer some issue in the case, that is, where it is irrelevant or immaterial, or where it is of such a character as to prejudice the jury. 38 The admission or exclusion of relevant demonstrative evidence is determined by the trial court through balancing the probative value of the evidence against the dangers of unfair prejudice, distraction, confusion of issues and waste of time. 39 Where there is a conflict or dispute in the evidence as to the existence of the particular object sought to be introduced into evidence, demonstrative evidence is not admissible. 40

The right to introduce and exhibit to the jury articles or objects to which testimony relates or which tend to elucidate or explain issues in a case exists to the same extent in criminal prosecutions as in civil cases. 41 Instruments, devices, or tokens used in the commission of a crime and taken from the person or premises of the accused, 42 by an officer upon the arrest, are competent evidence, provided they were not obtained as a result of an unlawful search and seizure. 43 Clothing of the accused or of the victim of a crime may also be exhibited where relevant to the inquiry. 44

The admission of objects or articles is largely a matter for the discretion of the court. 45

◆ Observation: It is common practice to send exhibits admitted into evidence into the jury room. A trial court's decision to send an exhibit into the jury is guided by consideration of whether the exhibit will aid the jury in proper consideration of the case, whether a party will be unduly prejudiced, and whether the exhibit could be subjected to improper use by the jury. 46 In determining the propriety of the use of a physical object before a jury, the courts weigh the explanatory value of the object against its possible emotional effect, with no flat rule that a gruesome object cannot be used. 47 If an object is not to be received in evidence, it should not be permitted to remain in the view of the jury. 48

A party may require the production of private documents in the possession of his adversary or of third persons for use as evidence in a trial. 49 Likewise, a party may, where he or she desires to exhibit an object to the jury by way of demonstrative proof, require his or her adversary to produce the object if it has probative value as evidence. 50 The right to do so does not depend upon having an interest in the object, or, where exhibits in a previous cause are in question, upon having an interest in the original cause, or upon the object's being admissible or inadmissible in the cause for which it was prepared, or upon the right or want of right of the public to examine the thing; so long as the object physically exists, anyone needing it as evidence at a trial has a right to call for it unless some exception is shown to the general rule. 51

§ 936 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Government's display of over 200 pounds of cocaine seized in drug conspiracy trial was not abuse of discretion. United States v Jones (1995, CA10 Wyo) 44 F3d 860.

In products-liability action by tree worker against manufacturer of rope, trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing two rope samples into evidence, where although manufacturer contended that it was prejudiced by admission of rope because jury could only conclude that frayed rope making up exhibits was defective and, by improper inference, that manufacturer's rope was defective, purpose of offering ropes was not to establish that there was manufacturing defect in rope used at time of accident, but to show that rope was produced by manufacturer; changes made in ropes were not material to purpose for which ropes were admitted; and trial court gave limiting instruction to jury that ropes were only to be considered for identification purposes. Columbian Rope Co. v Todd (1994, Ind App) 631 NE2d 941, CCH Prod Liab Rep ¶ 13899, transfer dismissed (Jul 29, 1994).

The trial court did not err during a first-degree murder prosecution involving poisoning by admitting into evidence medical devices which defendant contended were used merely to inflame the passions of the jury. The medical devices were identified and introduced solely to illustrate the testimony of a registered nurse involved in the victim's primary care and treatment, the pieces of equipment were not excessively displayed and were not presented separately to the jury for a closer inspection, and the probative value of the evidence substantially outweighed the possibility of any unfair prejudice to defendant. GS § 8C-1, Rule 403. State v Moore (1994) 335 NC 567, 440 SE2d 797.

In a prosecution of defendant for attempted robbery with a dangerous weapon, the trial court did not err in admitting into evidence a broken bottleneck where defendant pushed a rock-like object into the face and lip of his victim and told her he would cut her bad; the victim believed she had been cut and was extremely scared; defendant's movements were limited to a very small area through which no one else walked between the time defendant grabbed the victim and the policeman arrived; the policeman watched defendant continuously; the policeman saw defendant drop something that was dark and no larger than a baseball that made a "glassy sound" when it hit the ground; the bottleneck was the only big object found in the area and no other bottle parts were found in the area; and the policeman frisked defendant for weapons, without finding anything, even though defendant did have some implement in his hand when he attacked the victim. State v Harris (1994) 115 NC App 560, 445 SE2d 626.

The trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for mistrial based on the admission into evidence of a pin and photograph previously suppressed by the trial court in pretrial motions on the ground that defendant's opening argument to the jury had reflected the trial court's suppression order where the suppression order was entered without prejudice to the State to show that the two items might be admissible under another theory of law; defendant was thus aware that the State might come forward with a legally acceptable basis for admission of the evidence; the State showed that the items were lawfully seized by an officer who entered defendant's trailer to effect an arrest; and defense counsel admitted that he did not tell the jury during the opening statement that the State would not offer either the pin or the photograph. Even if the admission of these items was error, defendant failed to present evidence of prejudice worthy of a mistrial considering the overwhelming evidence presented against him. State v Hill (1994) 116 NC App 573, 449 SE2d 573.

§ 937 Instrumentalities used in crime

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

An instrumentality, such as a weapon or ammunition, used by the accused in committing the crime charged, is admissible in evidence. 52 When real evidence is purported to be the actual object associated with a crime, proof of accuracy has two elements, the offering party must establish (1) that the evidence is identical to that involved in the crime, and (2) that the evidence has not been tampered with. 53

§ 937 ----Instrumentalities used in crime [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Evidence of drug-manufacturing chemicals and materials seized from defendant's residence and place of employment should have been excluded; it would not be regarded as "inextricably intertwined" with charged drug and firearms offenses given weakness of proof of drug offenses (no drugs were found), weakness of link between drug offenses and particular weapon found, and barely adequate proof of defendant's possession of weapon, which rendered impact of drug evidence greater. United States v Ridlehuber (1993, CA5 Tex) 11 F3d 516.

District court did not abuse its discretion in admitting into evidence 92 tinfoil packets recovered from drain pipe directly below toilet where cocaine distribution conspiracy defendants were arrested since they were relevant to proving what defendants were doing when they were arrested, and since chemical analysis was impossible due to contents having been exposed to moisture, defendants were able to argue that jury should reject government's version of what took place, hence were not prejudiced. United States v James (1994, CA7 Wis) 40 F3d 850, cert den (1995, US) 63 USLW 3563.

In a prosecution of defendant for attempted robbery with a dangerous weapon, the trial court did not err in admitting into evidence a broken bottleneck where defendant pushed a rock-like object into the face and lip of his victim and told her he would cut her bad; the victim believed she had been cut and was extremely scared; defendant's movements were limited to a very small area through which no one else walked between the time defendant grabbed the victim and the policeman arrived; the policeman watched defendant continuously; the policeman saw defendant drop something that was dark and no larger than a baseball that made a "glassy sound" when it hit the ground; the bottleneck was the only big object found in the area and no other bottle parts were found in the area; and the policeman frisked defendant for weapons, without finding anything, even though defendant did have some implement in his hand when he attacked the victim. State v Harris (1994) 115 NC App 560, 445 SE2d 626.

A weapon may be admissible as evidence even though there is no proof that it was the actual murder weapon; all that is required is a sufficient foundation demonstrating circumstances justifying an inference of the likelihood that the weapon was used in the course of the crime charged. Commonwealth v Murphy (1995, Pa) 657 A2d 927.

Two .357 caliber revolvers were properly admitted into evidence at the defendant's murder prosecution where (1) the defendant possessed both weapons at the time of his arrest, (2) the 2 victims were killed with .357 caliber weapons, (3) the bullet recovered from one victim was consistent with one of the weapons, and (4) an expert testified that the other victim could have been killed with the other weapon. Commonwealth v Murphy (1995, Pa) 657 A2d 927.

§ 938 Articles similar to those used in, or illustrative of, crime, generally

While real evidence may consist of the actual object associated with a crime, 54 it is not necessary that the object introduced into evidence actually be that which was used in the commission of the offense, provided that the object was at least suitable for the commission of the offense. 55 Thus as long as the state presents sufficient evidence from which a rational trier of fact could conclude that the crime was committed with the use of a weapon, it makes no material difference whether the weapon admitted into evidence was the one actually used or was only similar to the weapon used by the defendant. 56

An article, which relates to the crime in such a way as to be illustrative of the crime, is likewise admissible in evidence. 57 Accordingly, the following have been deemed admissible as evidence: a windshield through which a bullet had passed; 58 pieces of glass found at the scene of the accident; 59 a defective tire taken from the defendant's truck where the tire showed defects similar to the tire impression found near the scene of an assault; 60 a hammer found at the scene of a burglary; 61 buckshot dug from a wall after a shooting; 62 blood-stained checks found on the floor near the body of the deceased; 63 a blood-soaked newspaper which had been placed over blood spots on the pavement at the scene of the crime; 64 blood-stained bedding taken from the bed of the deceased; 65 blood-stained paper towels found near the deceased; 66 a portion of a blood-stained tree trunk found near the murder victim; 67 bone fragments found where the murder victim's severed corpse was discovered; 68 a ski mask found in a third party's hotel room, where bank surveillance photographs showed that the bank robber wore a mask; 69 jugs of whisky found in an automobile, in a prosecution for driving while intoxicated; 70 and the fender of an automobile which struck and killed a boy. 71

District court did not err in allowing government to show jury gun similar to one defendant allegedly possessed when he sold marijuana to witnesses since, by observing size and shape of .357 revolver, jury could better assess whether witnesses actually could have seen revolver under defendant's jacket as they testified. United States v McIntosh (1994, CA8 Mo) 23 F3d 1454.

The trial court did not err in permitting the district attorney to display a .22 caliber pistol before the jury where two of the State's witnesses testified that the pistol was similar to the pistol used by defendant in committing the crimes charged, and the court instructed the jury that the pistol was not substantive evidence but could be considered only for the purpose of illustrating the testimony of the two State's witnesses. State v See, 301 NC 388, 271 SE2d 282.

§ 939 --Articles in actual or constructive possession of accused

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

An article in the actual or constructive possession of the accused or victim, which serves to illustrate the crime charged, is admissible in evidence. 72 Thus, the following articles found in the possession of the accused may be shown: money alleged to have been stolen; 73 money alleged to have been obtained through the sale or distribution of illegal drugs; 74 blood-stained money taken from defendant upon his arrest for murder; 75 articles identified as belonging to the victim of the crime; 76 burglar's tools or hardware which could be used for the purpose of breaking and entering; 77 a pistol 78 or ammunition found in defendant's home; 79 a pillow found in murder defendant's truck where a pathologist testified that victim's death was due to asphyxia; 80 a gun, flashlight, and bottle of liquor, in a prosecution for robbery; 81 a knife allegedly used by defendant during rape; 82 an obscene film; 83 adult magazines and various sexual paraphernalia, in a prosecution for child molestation; 84 fraudulent checks; 85 items used for the alteration of postal money orders; 86 items used for counterfeiting; 87 and a letter upon which blood had fallen. 88

§ 939 --Articles in actual or constructive possession of accused [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

A weapon may be admissible as evidence even though there is no proof that it was the actual murder weapon; all that is required is a sufficient foundation demonstrating circumstances justifying an inference of the likelihood that the weapon was used in the course of the crime charged. Commonwealth v Murphy (1995, Pa) 657 A2d 927.

§ 940 Clothing

View Entire Section

The clothing of a person is admissible in evidence to the extent that it is relevant to the inquiry and helpful in resolving a fact in issue. 89 Accordingly, the clothing of a defendant 90 or third person, 91 if relevant, is admissible. The clothing must be identified and shown to be in virtually the same condition as at the time of the crime. 92

◆ Observation: The introduction in evidence of clothing seized by the police of one suspected of a felony does not compel the defendant to become a witness against himself in violation of the Fifth Amendment. 93

§ 941 --Clothing of victim

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Clothing of a victim has been deemed admissible to show: the nature of his wounds or the manner in which he died; 94 his position at the time of the crime; 95 the course of a bullet; 96 the use of force by the defendant; 97 or to disprove the defendant's claim that he acted in self-defense, 98 or that the victim died from a heart attack. 99

Clothing worn by the deceased at the time of a fatal assault upon him is not rendered inadmissible solely because it is cumulative of other evidence. 1

Reversible error occurred where prosecution introduced into evidence bloodstained shirt worn by deceased at time of shooting, it being cumulative evidence which tended only to arouse and inflame emotions of jury. State v Steele, 120 Ariz 462, 586 P2d 1274.

While articles of murder victim's clothing should have been excluded as largely irrelevant in light of investigators testimony that the murder victim had been found nude, the excludible items of personal clothing were not particularly inflammatory nor likely to divert the jury from its focus on aggravating and mitigating factors and therefore the admission of the clothing was harmless error. In a personal injury action, surgical and prosthetic appliances worn by the injured party are admissible in evidence, at the discretion of the trial court, provided that they are not unduly inflammatory or offensive and are not such as will unjustly arouse sympathy for or prejudice against a party. 2 In some cases, the device, although not formally offered or admitted in evidence, is exhibited to the jury, alluded to by the witnesses, and treated by the court as if admitted, with no issue being made as to the basic impropriety of displaying and alluding to objects not admitted in evidence. 3

While it is generally proper, when a fact in issue may be explained by the production of an article or object to which testimony relates, to bring such article or object into court and exhibit it to the jury, 4 the admissibility of samples to prove the condition, quality, or nature of an article, substance, or mass which is not before the court is subject to certain limitations and qualifications. 5 Not only must the samples be properly identified as to source, and shown to be in the same or substantially the same condition as they were at the time the sample's condition became material to the issues involved, 6

but they must also appear fairly representative of the whole, where the samples are offered to show the condition of a large amount of material. 7

◆ Observation: A court may properly take judicial notice that in statistical analysis, the sample size of 30 or more is generally recognized as sufficient to guarantee normality of the distribution of sample means. 8 In some cases, a further qualification exists which requires that the circumstances and uses of the sample, at the time of its taking, must be similar to the circumstances and uses of the object or mass whose condition, nature, or quality it purports to establish. 9

§ 944 --Admissibility as effected by intended use as evidence

View Entire Section

It is within the trial court's discretion to determine whether or not to permit a juror to inspect a sample. 10 Inspection evidence is properly received where it is both relevant and probative, where better evidence cannot be expected, and where the dangers of its use are small in comparison to its advantages. 11 Samples whose admission in evidence might otherwise be questionable have been properly received in a number of cases where they were offered to illustrate or explain testimony, the court basing its conclusion on the value of the exhibit to the jury's determination of the issues, as compared with the possible harm resulting from the introduction of the evidence. 12 Moreover, a sample whose admission might otherwise constitute reversible error may be properly received in evidence when offered in rebuttal or upon cross-examination on an issue rendered material by evidence previously admitted. 13

There appears to be some agreement, however, that upon a question of the good merchantable quality of goods, a sample is not admissible in evidence in the absence of anything to show that the jury would know what goods would be of good merchantable quality. 14

b. Authentication and Identification of Objects, Articles, Samples, and Specimens [945-949]

(1). In General [945-947]

§ 945 Generally; objects readily identifiable and resistant to change

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Authentication and identification are aspects of relevancy that are a condition precedent to admissibility. 15 The requirement of authentication or identification is satisfied by evidence sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question is what its proponent claims. 16 At the threshold, the proponent must make a prima facie showing of authenticity sufficient to enable a reasonable juror to find in favor of authenticity. 17 Article or objects which relate to or tend to explain the issues or form a part of the transaction are admissible in evidence after a showing that the proposed exhibit is relevant and material, 18 that the proposed exhibit is what it purports to be, and it is in substantially the same condition as it was at the time of the crime, 19 or occurrence. 20 The trial court has discretion to exclude an exhibit if evidence as to its accuracy is conflicting or if significant changes have occurred between the time of the event and the time the exhibit was prepared. 21 Physical objects based on post-event inspection of those objects are ordinarily inadmissible unless the proponent produces evidence showing that the objects and conditions expected remained essentially unchanged in the interim. 22

As a general rule, if the proffered evidence is unique, readily identifiable and relatively resistant to change, that foundation need only consist of testimony by a witness with knowledge that the evidence is what the proponent claims. 23 The credibility of authenticating witnesses is for the trier of fact to determine. 24

The determination whether a proper foundation has been laid for the introduction of an exhibit into evidence rests within the discretion of the trial court, 25 and a higher court reviews a lower court's authentication ruling in a deferential manner, testing only for mistake of law 26 or a clear abuse of discretion. 27 Once the judge admits the evidence, any weakness in positive identification goes to the weight rather than the admissibility of the evidence, and is thus reserved for the jury. 28

Certain "linesheets" prepared by monitoring agent during electronic telephone surveillance (containing master tape numbers, dates used, sequential numbers of calls, beginning and ending times of conversations, and corresponding counter numbers on recorder) were properly admitted in criminal trial as business records under CLS CPLR § 4518 since linesheets served important administrative function in daily conduct of police surveillance operation, they were required to be made under court order, their purpose was to maintain inventory of surveillance tapes and to safeguard them against tampering, and they were included in progress reports that were filed regularly with judge supervising wiretap order. People v Guidice (1994) 83 NY2d 630, 612 NYS2d 350, 634 NE2d 951.

§ 946 Objects not readily identifiable and susceptible to change; chain of custody requirements

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

When the evidence is not readily identifiable or when a witness has failed to observe its uniqueness, and is susceptible to alteration by tampering or contamination, the trial court requires a foundation more stringent than in cases involving objects readily identifiable and resistant to change, 29 entailing a chain of custody of the item with sufficient completeness to render it improbable that the original item has either been exchanged with another or been contaminated or tampered with. 30

The purpose of establishing a chain of custody is to guaranty the integrity of physical evidence, 31 and to prevent the introduction of evidence which is not authentic. 32 The less susceptible an exhibit is to fungibility, alteration or tampering, the less strictly is the chain of custody rule applied. 33 Moreover, according to some courts, chain of custody of physical evidence is irrelevant where the exhibit is positively identified. 34

◆ Observation: In general, proof of the chain of custody is vital to the admissibility of evidence if its relevant characteristics are distinguishable only by scientific test or analyses. 35 Proof of this identity involves showing that the thing was taken 36 from the particular body from which it was supposed to be taken, 37 and that thereafter it was properly kept 38 and, if necessary, transported 39 and delivered 40 to the one who produced it at the trial or the expert who analyzed or examined it. If the "complete chain of evidence" is established, the substance is admissible; 41 otherwise, it is not admissible. 42

◆ Observation: The fixing of bright line chain of custody or authentication rules for all cases is impossible because each case requires a judgmental determination of whether sufficient guaranties exist that the evidence proffered truly relates to those matters or things which are relevant to the case. 43

Case authorities:

Chain of custody for vials of cocaine was established by detective's testimony that envelopes submitted at trial contained two vials informant purchased from defendant—identifying those vials using his initials and case number—and that he personally filled out lab request and placed vials in police evidence locker, by another officer's testimony that he delivered vials from police station to lab, and by forensic chemist's testimony that he received samples from sealed envelope and returned them to sealed envelope upon completing his analysis. United States v Ricco (1995, CA4 Va) 52 F3d 58.

§ 947 --Proof of proper chain of custody

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

In general, in order to show a proper chain of custody, the record must show each link and also the following with regard to each link's possession of the item: (1) the receipt of the item; (2) the ultimate disposition of the item, that is, transfer, destruction, or retention; and (3) the safeguarding and handling of the item between receipt and disposition. 44 Ordinarily, the fact of a "missing link" does not prevent admission of real evidence so long as there is sufficient proof that the evidence is what it purports to be and has not been altered in any material aspect. 45 According to some courts, however, if the state, or any other proponent of demonstrative evidence, fails to identify a link or fails to show for the record any one of the three criteria as to each link, the result is a missing link, and the item is inadmissible. 46 Where this view is followed, if the state has shown each link and has shown all three criteria as to each link, but has done so with circumstantial evidence, as opposed to the direct testimony of the link, as to one or more criteria or as to one or more links, the result is a weak link, and the item may be admitted. 47

When an object is subject to positive identification the proof of chain of custody need not be conclusive. 48

In setting up a chain of evidence, the prosecution is not required to elicit testimony from every custodian 49 or every person who had an opportunity to come in contact with the evidence sought to be admitted. 50 Where an item of evidence is jointly possessed by two people, it is only necessary for one of them to testify as to its chain of custody. As long as one of the joint possessors testifies and that testimony negates the possibility of tampering, it alone is adequate to prove chain of custody. 51 Further, the chain of custody rule does not require the prosecution to account for the possession of evidence before it comes into their hands. 52

While the state bears the burden of establishing the proper chain of custody, 53 the state need not exclude or negate every possibility of tampering or substitution, but must demonstrate that it is reasonably probable or reasonably certain that no tampering, alteration, or substitution has occurred. 54 Thus, a chain of custody is sufficiently traced where circumstances demonstrate a reasonable assurance the object proffered into evidence is the same object and is in the same condition as of the time it was obtained. 55 The requirement of reasonable certainty is not met when some vital link in the chain of possession is not accounted for, because then it is as likely as not that the evidence analyzed was not the evidence originally received. 56 Conversely, when it is the barest speculation that there was tampering, it is proper to admit the evidence, and let what doubt remains go to its weight, 57 since mere speculation is insufficient to establish a break in a chain of custody. 58

The integrity of evidence is presumed to be preserved unless there is a showing of bad faith, ill will, or proof that the evidence has been tampered with. 59 The burden is on the defendant to make some showing that the evidence was tampered or meddled with, to overcome a presumption of regularity in the handling of exhibits by public officers, and a presumption that public officers properly discharge their duties. 60 However, if there is some evidence of tampering, then the proponent must show that acceptable precautions were taken to maintain the evidence in its original state. 61

If the trial court after considering the nature of the evidence, and the surrounding circumstances, including presentation, custody and probability of tampering alterations determines that the evidence, is substantially in the same condition as the time at issue, the court may admit it. 62 Once the judge admits the evidence, any issue as to whether the proponent of evidence has proven an adequate chain of custody goes to the weight rather than the admissibility of the evidence, and is thus reserved for the jury. 63

Audio tape of murder defendant's confession was properly admitted into evidence, where testimony of officer present at questioning that he could identify tape by defendant's signature and by date on tape, that he had compared tape and transcript, and that transcript was accurate as to matters contained on tape was sufficient authentication; chain of evidence rule was not applicable for admissibility under such circumstances. State v Cameron (1995, Tenn Crim) 909 SW2d 836.

Before samples may be admitted in evidence, they must be properly identified as to their source. 64 Moreover, it must be shown that they are in the same or substantially the same condition they were in at the time such condition became material to the issues involved. 65 However, the fact that the offered sample has undergone some change in condition, whether occasioned by lapse of time or otherwise, may not be considered material to the fact sought to be established, or persons of ordinary knowledge may be able to determine from the sample's present appearance, with reasonable accuracy, what its condition was at the time pertinent to the issue involved. 66

§ 949 Objects, specimens, or parts taken from human body

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

When objects, such as bullets, specimens, or parts taken from a human body, are produced in court and used there as an exhibit, or made the basis for the testimony or report of an expert or officer, the proponent of the evidence must prove the identity of the object taken from the human body. 67 Identity of a substance taken from the human body for the purpose of an experiment or test may be proved by a witness' direct or opinion evidence. 68 If it is not possible to prove the identity of a substance by such evidence—because, as in most cases, the substance has passed through several hands before being tested and produced in court—it is necessary to establish "a complete chain of evidence," tracing the possession of the substance to the final custodian. 69 The evidence must not leave it to conjecture as to who had it and what was done with it between the taking and the analysis. 70

It has been said that continuity of possession of a specimen is as effective to guarantee identity as are identifying marks or labels, and since such marks or labels may be fabricated at a later date, continuity of possession, which requires proof of delivery, possession, and safekeeping, is more readily subject to verification. 71 However, it is sometimes presumed that an employee of a state crime laboratory will perform a blood analysis competently and responsibly, in a manner that will not contaminate the same or otherwise affect the accuracy of further analysis. 72 Further, a statute may provide that a report of analysis is prima facie evidence as to the custody of the material described in it. 73

§ 949 ----Objects, specimens, or parts taken from human body [SUPPLEMENT]Case authorities:

The first link in the chain of custody of a blood sample, that is, who drew the blood, was sufficiently proven to permit admission of the sample and expert testimony based thereon where the autopsy physician testified that an autopsy assistant was also present during the autopsy; an investigator testified that he received two vials of the victim's blood directly from the autopsy physician and the autopsy assistant; and this evidence permits an inference that either the physician or the assistant drew the blood during the autopsy. State v Frye (1995) 341 NC 470, 461 SE2d 664.

In general, it is proper for the court to allow one to exhibit his or her person or body to the jury in a variety of actions, as for example, for the purpose of establishing the nature and extent of plaintiff's injuries, 74 establishing family resemblance, 75 showing racial characteristics, 76 hereditary peculiarities, 77 or violence by police authorities. 78 However, like any other evidence, the exhibition of physical characteristics, is subject to challenge on the ground that a proper foundation has not been laid 79 —that is, that there is no evidence before the jury that the physical characteristics proffered were present at the time the offending act was committed. 80

§ 951 In criminal proceedings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

As a general rule, a victim's exhibition of his or her injury to the jury in a criminal prosecution is proper to show the nature and extent of the injury to the victim, unless specific reasons of policy apply to prohibit it. 81 Further, a victim may be displayed where identification of the victim is relevant and the probative value of the victim's display substantially outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice to the defendant. 82

In a criminal prosecution, the accused, while not a witness on his behalf, may be required to display to the trier of fact wounds, 83 scars, 84 tattoos, 85 teeth, 86 birthmarks or other distinguishing features. 87 Because such an exhibit is not testimonial in nature, the defendant is not required to take the stand before being allowed to exhibit himself to the jury when such a showing is to the defendant's advantage. 88

As long as the demonstration is relevant to the facts to be proved or disproved in the case, 89 the state's exhibition of a defendant's physical characteristics does not implicate the defendant's privilege against self-incrimination. 90 Further, some courts approve of the placing of items upon the bodies of defendants at the request of prosecutors. 91 and accordingly, for the purpose of identification, an accused may be required to wear clothing 92 or eyeglasses alleged to have been worn by the actor. 93 The defendant can also introduce demonstrative or real physical evidence by exhibiting himself to the jury in items of clothing relevant to the inquiry, whether he testifies or not. 94 However, demonstrations with the defendant's body can be taken too far so as to deny the defendant a fair trial. 95

§ 952 In personal injury actions

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

As a general rule, a plaintiff's exhibition of his or her injury to the jury in a personal injury action is proper to show the nature and extent of the injury to the plaintiff, unless specific reasons of policy apply to prohibit it. 96 This is so because there is no other class of evidence more satisfactory or convincing than the production and inspection of the very object or person whose condition is being investigated. 97

Although in a number of cases, under the circumstances considered, it would be error to permit the plaintiff in a personal injury action to exhibit his person, or a part of his body, to the jury, 98 the contention that such an exhibition would prejudice the jury against the defendant, or arouse sympathy in favor of the plaintiff, has generally been rejected. 99 Thus, even though the display of plaintiff's injured body part may have the effect at times of inflaming the passions of the jury or inciting extreme empathy, that itself does not serve as a basis for exclusion of the evidence. 1 The extent to which one may be allowed to exhibit his person or body to the jury is a matter largely in the discretion of the trial court. 2 If it appears that the exhibition by the plaintiff would necessitate an exposure which would be indecent, the court, in the exercise of its discretion, should not permit the exhibition before the jury. 3

◆ Observation: Authorities are generally unpersuaded by unfair prejudice to the defendant, and only in extreme cases will courts rely on the indecency of the showing to deny the proffer. 4

Under the general rule of admissibility, the plaintiff may be permitted to exhibit an arm or shoulder, 5 hand or fingers, 6 leg, 7 foot or ankle, 8 eye or eye socket, 9 or his torso, 10 or even amputated limbs or other separated parts of the body, 11 provided the exhibition is for a useful purpose and is not objectionable on the ground of indecency. 12

It has been recognized in a number of cases that permission for the injured plaintiff to exhibit his person to the jury was properly granted, notwithstanding that such exhibition would involve a manual touching of the plaintiff's person, or at least a close-up inspection of the injured portion of the body, by the jury. 13 However, there are a few cases in which a manual touching of the plaintiff's person or close inspection of the injured portion of the plaintiff's body has been regarded as improper. 14

The exhibition of an injury to the jury is within the trial court's discretion, and a party may demonstrate the nature and extent of his injury, or disability resulting therefrom, and it is common and correct practice to exhibit a wound or injury to the jury even where there is no dispute as to the fact and nature of such injury. There was no abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in permitting plaintiff to exhibit to the jury the stump of his amputated leg and his artificial leg, even if the injury was fully described otherwise, since a personal view of the stump and artificial leg could aid the jury in understanding voluminous evidence and was relevant as to the nature and extent of the claimed injury and various elements of claimed damages, and the court could not say that the only purpose of the exhibition was to excite the feelings of the jury. Darling v Charleston Community Memorial Hospital (4th Dist) 50 Ill App 2d 253, 200 NE2d 149, affd 33 Ill 2d 326, 211 NE2d 253, 14 ALR3d 860, cert den 383 US 946, 16 L Ed 2d 209, 86 S Ct 1204.

§ 953 --Active demonstration to show effect of injury

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A demonstration by an injured person, in the presence of the jury, by a physical act, for the purpose of showing or illustrating the extent or effect of an injury, which goes further than a mere passive exhibition of an injured member or portion of the body, has been permitted in numerous instances, where the court has satisfied itself of the propriety of such practice in the light of the facts presented. 15 But it is proper not to permit such a demonstration where it would serve no useful purpose 16 or would tend to inflame or unduly prejudice the jury. 17 The determination of the question rests largely in the discretion of the trial court, 18 and its ruling as to such permissibility, whether it is for or against allowing the demonstration, is seldom overruled by the higher court. 19

The pricking of the injured portion of the plaintiff's body with a needle to show that there is no sensation in it has been permitted in some instances, 20 based on the circumstances involved, but not in others. 21 However, demonstrations performed upon the body of the plaintiff causing the plaintiff to cry out or otherwise evince pain, have been disapproved, 22 although the fact that the plaintiff cried out or otherwise indicated a feeling of pain while such a demonstration was being made in the presence of the jury has also been held not to constitute grounds for a mistrial, setting aside the verdict, or the like. 23 Furthermore, it has been deemed permissible for a plaintiff to demonstrate blindness to the jury by having another person thrust a dagger at his eye. 24

Demonstrations by the plaintiff to show the condition of his injured arm or shoulder are permissible under some, 25 but not all circumstances 26 as are also demonstrations to show the condition of his injured hand or fingers. 27 Permitting the plaintiff to walk to show that the injury to his leg, knee, or foot necessitates his limping, or permitting other demonstrations to show the condition of his injured leg, knee, or foot, have been approved in some cases considering the question, 28 although under some circumstances such a demonstration has been disapproved. 29 In some cases dealing with the matter, however, the courts have disapproved demonstrations requiring or involving the assistance of one or more of the jurors. 30

§ 954 To show resemblance and hereditary peculiarities

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

According to some courts, persons between whom an alleged relationship exists may be exhibited to the trier of fact to show a resemblance of features or other indications of relationship. 31 Whether a child should be exhibited to the jury to establish family resemblance is largely in the discretion of the court. 32 The decisions are not agreed as to the conditions under which such an exhibition is properly made. Some courts state that it is only proper to exhibit a child where attention is called to particular points of resemblance. 33 There is also authority for the view that while, in the case of adults or children with settled features, comparisons may fairly be made by the jury to see if there is any resemblance tending to show the relationship of parent and child, a comparison between an adult and a very young child whose features are immature and undergoing frequent changes should not be allowed, in the absence of other marked corporal indications. 34 The precise age at which, under this view, a child will be deemed too immature to be exhibited is dependent upon the facts and circumstances of each case. 35 Although no claim can be reasonably made that there is any resemblance between a very young child and his or her alleged father, 36 a child of 2 years, 37 or several years, 38 of age has been deemed sufficiently mature and settled in his or her facial and physical characteristics to afford a basis for comparison. Moreover, there is authority for the view that an exhibition of the child to the trier of fact for the purpose of showing resemblance to the putative father is impermissible in paternity proceedings. 39

◆ Observation: There might be an appropriate occasion for the child to appear before the trier of fact for a reason other than showing resemblance to the putative father, such as to show the personal relationship between the child and the putative father. 40

§ 955 To show racial characteristics

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Some courts permit a child born out of wedlock to be exhibited to the trier of fact in a paternity proceeding when the question is one of race or color of skin. 41 However, this line of decisions has been criticized on the ground that they are not supported by satisfactory scientific basis or statutory construction. 42

Where the significance of the evidence depends upon race or color, the admissibility of it is not affected by the extreme youth of the child. 43 But it is clear that the courts will accord little weight to attempted proof of paternity or nonpaternity upon a basis of racial color, where the shades of color are uncertain or variable. 44

Under some circumstances, when the age of a person is material, it is permissible to permit the person whose age is in question to be brought before the trier of fact to determine the age from the appearance of the person. 45 Ordinarily, however, the exhibition of the person is not enough; there must also be additional evidence of age presented. 46

Evidence of the character and identity of footprints and tracks found where a crime is discovered and of the similarity of those footprints to the footprints of the accused, or those made by shoes worn by, or found in, the possession of the accused, is admissible to identify the accused as the guilty person. 47 While the comparison of prints is not a matter solely restricted to expert testimony, expert evidence showing the results of an experiment to determine the correspondence of footprints found at the scene of the crime to the shoe or track of an accused is generally admissible. 48 Nonetheless, expert testimony regarding the size of the shoe making an imprint may be inadmissible where the evidence does not show that the scientific community has accepted the expert's methodology. 49 Photographic enlargements of fingerprints and palmprints may be used by experts in testifying before the jury as to identity, and a projector may be used by experts in testifying as to identity from palmprints for the purpose of displaying photographic impressions to the jury. 50 Plaster casts of shoe prints found at the scene of a crime are admissible into evidence at the discretion of the trial judge where the casts are relevant and probative. 51

Expert testimony is admissible in many situations to identify a person through a comparison of the marks left by teeth on a surface or substance, often the flesh of another person, with the dentition of the person in question. 52

Properly verified or authenticated photographs and X-ray pictures are not rendered inadmissible in evidence because of marks, memoranda, legends, or other extraneous matter on them, where the individual who made the marks or writings, or another witness familiar with the facts, explains them or testifies as to their correctness. 58

§ 960 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Photographs of persons, things, and places, when duly verified 59 and shown by extrinsic evidence to be faithful representations of the subjects as of the time in question, 60 are admissible in evidence, both in criminal, 61 and civil cases. 62 Such photographs may be admitted as aids to the jury in arriving at an understanding of the evidence, the situation or condition of objects or premises, the circumstances of an accident, or the condition or identity of a person when any such matter is relevant to the issues being litigated. 63 Photographic evidence must be practical, instructive, and calculated to assist both the jury and the court in understanding the case. 64

When properly authenticated, 65 photographs are, as a general rule, admissible under two distinct rules—(1) to illustrate, explain, or corroborate the testimony of a witness, 66 and (2) as probative evidence of what it depicts. 67 When used as probative evidence, photographic evidence takes on the status of a "mute," "silent," or "dumb" independent photographic witness. 68 The use of photographs, as testimony to the objects represented, rests fundamentally on the theory that they are the pictorial communications of a qualified witness, who uses this method of communication instead of, or in addition to, some other method. 69 In using photographs in the examination of witnesses, care should be observed in identifying for the record the particular photograph being used and in indicating precisely what the witness is testifying to from it. 70 However, under the "silent" witness theory, the photograph is used as substantive evidence, as opposed to merely demonstrative evidence, and there is no need for a witness to testify that the photograph accurately represents what he or she has observed. 71

If a photograph correctly shows the situation and surroundings as far as it purports to show them, it should not be excluded because it does not show all of the detailed facts and circumstances. 72 In this respect, photographs are inadmissible in evidence only where they do not illustrate or make clear some issue in the case 73 —that is, where they are irrelevant or immaterial 74 —or where they are of such a character as to prejudice the jury. 75 Moreover, photographs are not inadmissible solely because the defendant is willing to stipulate or has stipulated to matters contained in the photographs, or because these matters have been established by the testimony of a prosecution witness. 76

A photograph cannot be relied upon as proof in itself of the dimensions of the depicted object or objects, and cannot properly be made available to establish the relative proportions of such object or objects except by the evidence of personal knowledge or scientific experience to demonstrate accurately the facts sought to be established. 77 Similarly, the physical condition of premises portrayed by a photograph and unsupported by oral testimony is insufficient evidence to entitle a jury to reasonably infer constructive notice of such condition. 78

The admissibility of photographs is within the discretion of the trial court, and its ruling in this respect will not be interfered with on appeal except upon a clear showing of an abuse of discretion. 79 In determining whether demonstrative photographs should be admitted, a trial judge must determine whether they are relevant 80 and whether a proper foundation has been laid. 81 The trial court may properly exclude a photograph as being prejudicial 82 or as being merely cumulative of the issue already established. 83 But the mere fact that a photograph is cumulative does not render it inadmissible. 84

Under the Federal Rules of Evidence, photographs are generally admissible, upon a proper foundation. 85 Photographs may be excluded, however, as any other competent evidence, if the probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury, or by considerations of undue delay, waste of time, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence. 86 In demonstrating that the trial court clearly abused its discretion, the petitioner must demonstrate that the court error in allowing the photograph was of such significance that the trial was fatally infected. 87

§ 960 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]Case authorities:

Trial court did not err in admitting still photographs offered by condemnees where, although some of the photographs were inadmissible as showing temporary inconvenience during construction of condemnor's project, others were not, and condemnor had failed to point out objectionable photographs with particularity. Department of Transp. v Metts (1993) 208 Ga App 401, 430 SE2d 622, 93 Fulton County D R 1291.

Five photographs depicting defendant's extensive destruction of the contents of the home he shared with his wife were properly admitted to illustrate the testimony of three witnesses that on the night of a murder and other crimes defendant acted overtly hostile and with inexplicable violence toward his wife, notwithstanding defendant admitted destroying most of the property shown in the photographs, where the photographs were not used excessively or repetitively during the trial, and the probative value of the photographs was not outweighed by the potential prejudice to defendant. State v Barlowe (1994) 337 NC 371, 446 SE2d 352.

There was no plain error in an attempted rape and first-degree murder prosecution in the admission of photographs of the victim and the scene where the photographs were used to illustrate the pathologist's testimony concerning wounds on the body, the cause of death, and the crime scene. State v Carter (1994) 338 NC 569, 451 SE2d 157.

§ 961 Admissibility in criminal cases, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In criminal cases, a photograph is admissible to illustrate, explain, or corroborate the testimony of a witness; 88 to establish the identity of the defendant 89 or the victim 90 to establish the corpus delicti; 91 to show, in a prosecution involving theft, the stolen property, cash or a check, clothing, jewelry, a vehicle, 92 to show the corpse in a homicide prosecution, 93 the motive or intent of the defendant, 94 the position of the parties to the crime, 95 the position of the victim's body, 96 the condition of the victim, 97 the wounds of the victim, 98 the cause of the victim's death, 99 the scene of the crime, footprints, tire tracks, bloodstains at the scene of the crime, the place where the victim was found, or the weapon used by the defendant; 1 to refute the defendant's claim of self-defense 2 or that the victim had committed suicide; 3 to determine the atrociousness of the crime; 4 or the illustrate or explain an expert's testimony on ballistics. 5

§ 961 ----Admissibility in criminal cases, generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In prosecution for first degree felony murder and other related crimes, trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting various photographs and videotape of victim's apartment, despite defendant's claims that photographs and videotape showed numerous images of body of victim that made them prejudicial and inflammatory and that such evidence was not relevant because condition and position of victim's body, as well as fact that victim's death was not accidental, were not in issue. Most of photographs and majority of videotape showed exterior and interior of victim's apartment; only one photograph gave view of victim's body and, in videotape of approximately 20 minutes, victim's body was in view for approximately 1 minute. In addition, pictures of condition and position of body, as well as disarray in bedroom and blood on bed, allowed jury to draw inference that struggle had ensued prior to victim's death and, thus, were relevant to show that defendant had requisite intent to kill. Moreover, defendant was charged with felony murder, aggravated burglary, attempted robbery and battery; accordingly, pictures of possible places of entry into apartment, overturned purse and its contents, and victim's bruised and bloodied face were relevant to these charges. Finally, trial court minimized possible prejudice by ordering state to edit videotape prior to trial and exercising control over presentation of tape at trial and refusing to permit state to admit all of available still photographs at trial. State v Hernandez (1993) 115 NM 6, 846 P2d 312.

The trial court did not err in a first degree murder prosecution by admitting two autopsy photographs of the victim where the photographs were used to show the nature and extent of the wounds sustained by the victim; they were relevant to show not only the cause of death, but also as a means of proving the premeditation and deliberation elements of first-degree murder; there is no indication that the jury was subjected to unnecessary or excessive descriptions of the victim's injuries; and the context in which the photographs were introduced does not suggest that the purpose was to inflame the passions of the jury. State v Ysut Mlo (1994) 335 NC 353, 440 SE2d 98.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in a first-degree murder trial by admitting for illustrative purposes a color photograph of defendant and two others standing handcuffed next to a sheriff's deputy in the area where the victim's car was found and a color photograph of defendant and others walking across a field near the location of the car where the trial court determined that the photographs would assist law officers in illustrating their testimony about the assistance given them by the defendant in locating items of evidence; the photographs were not used excessively or repetitiously; and the trial court gave a limiting instruction and also instructed the jury that the fact that a photograph may depict the defendant in handcuffs is no evidence of his guilt. State v Barton (1994) 335 NC 696, 441 SE2d 295.

Five photographs depicting defendant's extensive destruction of the contents of the home he shared with his wife were properly admitted to illustrate the testimony of three witnesses that on the night of a murder and other crimes defendant acted overtly hostile and with inexplicable violence toward his wife, notwithstanding defendant admitted destroying most of the property shown in the photographs, where the photographs were not used excessively or repetitively during the trial, and the probative value of the photographs was not outweighed by the potential prejudice to defendant. State v Barlowe (1994) 337 NC 371, 446 SE2d 352.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in the admission of three autopsy photographs of a murder victim when a photograph of the victim at the shooting scene and a photograph of the victim's chest showing the hole where the bullet entered the body had already been admitted and when there was no dispute as to the cause of death or who inflicted the fatal wound where each photograph related to material events and facts to which each identifying witness was testifying, and the testimony of each witness whose testimony the photographs illustrated related to different aspects of the case and served different purposes. State v Gray (1994) 337 NC 772, 448 SE2d 794.

There was no plain error in an attempted rape and first-degree murder prosecution in the admission of photographs of the victim and the scene where the photographs were used to illustrate the pathologist's testimony concerning wounds on the body, the cause of death, and the crime scene. State v Carter (1994) 338 NC 569, 451 SE2d 157.

Though photographic evidence was improperly excluded, defendant was not prejudiced, since the scene depicted in the photographs was described for the jury, and it was not a difficult scene for the jury to imagine. State v Floyd (1994) 115 NC App 412, 445 SE2d 54.

Trial court in rape prosecution harmlessly erred in admitting mug- shot photos of defendant, from which image of booking plaque had been cut from print, where photos were immediately recognizable by jurors as mug shots suggesting prior criminal acts by defendant, where defendant had admitted prior arrests and convictions. State v Dinagen (1994, RI) 639 A2d 1353.

§ 962 Relevancy and materiality

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

It is always essential to the right to introduce a photograph in evidence that it have a relevant and material bearing upon some matter in controversy at the trial, and the party offering such evidence should establish its relevancy. 6 Accordingly, a basic test of the admissibility of a photograph is not necessity but relevance. 7 Relevancy is to be determined in the normal manner, that is, without regard to any special characterization of the proffered evidence and, under this conception, the issues of whether the evidence is cumulative or whether the pictures were taken away from the scene are routine issues basic to a determination of relevancy and are not issues arising from any exceptional nature of the proffered evidence. 8 The relevancy which the court considers is the relevancy of what is pictured, rather than the propriety of evidencing a relevant fact by a photograph; if the fact sought to be evidenced by a photograph is itself not admissible, it cannot be proved by photograph or otherwise. 9 Photographs can be relevant to a material issue either independently or by corroborating other evidence. 10

Photographs are relevant if they depict scenes that a witness is permitted to describe in their testimony. 11 If relevant, the photograph is not rendered inadmissible because: the subject portrayed could be described by words; 12 the accused admitted the facts portrayed or the photograph would be cumulative; 13 or if the subject itself had already been introduced into evidence. 14 However, a photograph which is entirely irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in the cause, 15 and which is of such a character as to divert the minds of the jury to improper or irrelevant considerations 16 or to prejudice the jury, 17 should be excluded from evidence. However, a relevant photograph is not inadmissible because an explanation is necessary in order to understand it. 18

§ 962 ----Relevancy and materiality [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In a prosecution for first degree murder by reason of deliberate premeditation and extreme cruelty or atrocity, it was not error for the court to permit the introduction into evidence of 5 color photographs which showed the extent of the victim's injuries; the photographs were relevant to show whether the murder was committed with extreme cruelty or atrocity, and the prosecution was not required to rely solely on the testimony of a witness and of the medical examiner. Commonwealth v Benson (1994) 419 Mass 114, 642 NE2d 1035.

Five photographs depicting defendant's extensive destruction of the contents of the home he shared with his wife were properly admitted to illustrate the testimony of three witnesses that on the night of a murder and other crimes defendant acted overtly hostile and with inexplicable violence toward his wife, notwithstanding defendant admitted destroying most of the property shown in the photographs, where the photographs were not used excessively or repetitively during the trial, and the probative value of the photographs was not outweighed by the potential prejudice to defendant. State v Barlowe (1994) 337 NC 371, 446 SE2d 352.

§ 963 Prejudicial character of photographs

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Photographs that are merely calculated to arouse the sympathies or prejudices of the jury are properly excluded, 19 particularly if they are not substantially necessary or instructive to show material facts or conditions. 20 If photographs which disclose the gruesome aspects of an accident or a crime are not pertinent, relevant, competent, or material on any issue in the case and serve the purpose solely of inflaming the minds of the jurors and prejudicing them against the accused, they should not be admitted in evidence. 21 However, if photographs are otherwise admissible for a proper purpose, they are not rendered inadmissible merely because they bring vividly to the jurors the details of a gruesome or shocking accident 22 or crime 23 even though they may tend to arouse the passion or prejudice of the jurors. Thus, the test for determining whether a photograph may be shown to the jury is whether the photograph's probative value outweighs its possible prejudicial effect. 24

When a photograph is offered the tendency of which may be to prejudice or inflame the jury, its admissibility lies in the sound discretion of the court. 25 A court may consider several factors in determining whether the probative value of evidence is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. These factors include, but are not limited to, the number of exhibits offered, their gruesomeness, their detail, their size, whether they are black and white or colored, whether they are close up, whether the body depicted is naked or clothed, 26 whether the exhibit is a slide or a print, the matter of projection or presentation, and the testimony the exhibit illustrates. 27 In determining whether the display of a grievous wound would be unduly prejudicial, the test is whether the site is of such a nature as to enflame the jurors and therefore prejudice them beyond the ordinary prejudice that is always sustained by the introduction of relevant evidence intended to prove guilt. 28 The availability of other means of proof and circumstances unique to each individual case must also be considered. 29 Thus, the photograph may be admitted if its value as evidence outweighs its possible prejudicial effect, 30 or may be excluded if its prejudicial effect outweighs its probative value. 31

§ 963 ----Prejudicial character of photographs [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder prosecution by admitting two black and white photographs of victim's fatal wound where a deputy indicated that they would be helpful to illustrate his testimony regarding the location of the wound and they were not excessive in number, repetitious or peculiarly gruesome. State v Huggins (1994) 338 NC 494, 450 SE2d 479.

Two sets of slides used by an expert witness to illustrate his testimony concerning the similarities of wounds suffered by the victim in this murder trial and another woman murdered by defendant were not unnecessarily repetitive, graphic and misleading where slides of each victim were shown side-by-side; no slide was kept on the screen for an excessive period or unnecessarily repeated; the presentation was made to the jury only on one occasion; and the trial court gave the jury limiting instructions at all appropriate times. State v Fisher (1994) 336 NC 684, 445 SE2d 866.

Five photographs depicting defendant's extensive destruction of the contents of the home he shared with his wife were properly admitted to illustrate the testimony of three witnesses that on the night of a murder and other crimes defendant acted overtly hostile and with inexplicable violence toward his wife, notwithstanding defendant admitted destroying most of the property shown in the photographs, where the photographs were not used excessively or repetitively during the trial, and the probative value of the photographs was not outweighed by the potential prejudice to defendant. State v Barlowe (1994) 337 NC 371, 446 SE2d 352.

There was no plain error in an attempted rape and first-degree murder prosecution in the admission of photographs of the victim and the scene where the photographs were used to illustrate the pathologist's testimony concerning wounds on the body, the cause of death, and the crime scene. State v Carter (1994) 338 NC 569, 451 SE2d 157.

Though photographic evidence was improperly excluded, defendant was not prejudiced, since the scene depicted in the photographs was described for the jury, and it was not a difficult scene for the jury to imagine. State v Floyd (1994) 115 NC App 412, 445 SE2d

In the prosecution of the defendant for the murder of an elderly woman in which there was testimony that the victim's spine was severed by blunt trauma and that all of her ribs were broken, the court did not commit reversible error when it permitted the introduction into evidence of a photograph of the defendant in a boxing stance without his shirt on in order to show the defendant's physical ability to inflict the injuries on the victim; even though the court was not convinced that the photograph was admissible, the photograph was not so inflammatory or prejudicial as to warrant a new trial. Commonwealth v Simmons (1995, Pa) 662 A2d 621, application gr (Pa) 1995 Pa LEXIS 1336 and petition for certiorari filed (Dec 14, 1995).

The court in a murder prosecution properly permitted the Commonwealth to introduce into evidence several color photographs of the murdered mother and her murdered 17 year old daughter during the penalty phase of the trial in order to prove the aggravating circumstance of torture where (1) both of the victims were stabbed dozens of times with a knife and scissors, (2) the mother was found with her hands tied behind her back, in a kneeling position with her back against a bed and with a pair of panties stuffed in her mouth, and (3) the daughter, who had been raped, was found with her hands tied behind her back and with a cloth noose around her neck; the defendant argued that the Commonwealth had black and white photographs that could have been used, but the black and white photographs showed the victims lying in pools of blood at the crime scene, while the color photographs depicted the victims cleansed of blood in the wound areas and lying prone on the medical examiner's table. Commonwealth v Lee (1995, Pa) 662 A2d 645, application gr (Pa) 1995 Pa LEXIS 1335 and petition for certiorari filed (Dec 18, 1995).

In a prosecution for aggravated battery based on the infliction of several knife wounds, the admission in evidence of photographs of the wounds has been held not precluded on the ground that they were calculated to arouse the passion and prejudice of the jury, although from a probative viewpoint the photographs had merely the cumulative effect of corroborating the testimony of the victim and his doctor, where the photographs, taken after the wounds had been stitched, did not show blood or the depth of the cuts, and hence were more favorable to the defendant than photographs of the original, unattended wounds would have been. § 964 --Gruesome or potentially inflammatory photograph rule

View Entire Section
Go to Supplement

In some jurisdictions, the rule is that a gruesome or potentially inflammatory photograph is admissible only if the need for the evidence clearly outweighs the likelihood of inflaming the minds and passions of the jurors. 32 According to jurisdictions following this rule, the photographs must have something more than probative value, because by the preliminary finding that they are gruesome, they are presumed to have a prejudicial and inflammatory effect on a jury against a defendant. 33 In other words, under the gruesome photograph rule, if the photograph is gruesome the prosecution must show that the photographs are of essential evidentiary value to its case. 34 However, in order for photographs to come within the gruesome photograph rule, there must be initial findings that they are gruesome. 35 The term gruesome in the context of photograph evidence should in most cases be limited to depiction of body or body parts. 36 Photographs that show much gore and blood, or emphasize contorted facial or bodily features, or depict a body after autopsy procedures; and color photographs and enlargements of particular areas of a corpse magnifying its revolting aspects will more likely be condemned as gruesome. 37 The visibility of blood in a photograph does not necessarily require a finding that the photograph is inflammatory. 38 Where photographs are not gruesome, they are properly admitted into evidence if the likelihood of their affecting the verdict or inflaming the minds and passions of the jurors is minimal. 39

§ 964 --Gruesome or potentially inflammatory photograph rule [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: Admissibility in homicide prosecution of allegedly gruesome or inflammatory visual recording of crime scene. 37 ALR5th 515.

Case authorities:

In prosecution of murder of convenience store clerk, trial court properly admitted autopsy photographs of gunshot wounds to victim's pelvic area, despite defendant's objection that photographs were cumulative and inflammatory, where photographs illustrated prosecutor's argument to jury that initial single shot to head had killed victim and that subsequent shots fired into her prone body demonstrated defendant's personal animosity toward her for ordering him to leave store, contrary to defendant's claim that he had executed victim on a government mission. Barnes v State (1994, Ind) 634 NE2d 46.

Although a trial judge has discretion to permit or preclude the introduction into evidence of photographs of victims and crime scenes, a trial judge must take care to avoid exposing the jury unnecessarily to material that might inflame the jurors' emotions and possibly deprive the defendant of an impartial jury. Commonwealth v Simmons (1995) 419 Mass 426, 646 NE2d 97.

It was not error for the court to permit the introduction into evidence of several photographs of a murder victim that were taken during the autopsy since none of the photographs showed the victim in an altered state and since the photographs were relevant as to whether the murder was committed with extreme atrocity or cruelty. Commonwealth v Simmons (1995) 419 Mass 426, 646 NE2d 97.

It was not error for the court to permit the introduction into evidence of numerous photographs of a murder victim's apartment, some of which showed blood stains and spatters, notwithstanding that some of the photographs might have been duplicative, since the photographs were relevant to understanding the testimony of the Commonwealth's expert witness and to proving the Commonwealth's contentions about the defendant's movements and actions. Commonwealth v Simmons (1995) 419 Mass 426, 646 NE2d 97.

The trial court did not err in a first-degree murder prosecution by admitting autopsy photographs of the victim's body and the testimony of the pathologist concerning these photographs where the trial judge excluded six color photographs as being redundant and "perhaps" inflammatory and the photographs admitted into evidence were illustrative of testimony regarding the nature and number of the victim's wounds and were not excessive in number. Their probative value was not substantially outweighed by any prejudicial effect. State v Fisher (1994) 336 NC 684, 445 SE2d 866.

There was no plain error in an attempted rape and first-degree murder prosecution in the admission of photographs of the victim and the scene where the photographs were used to illustrate the pathologist's testimony concerning wounds on the body, the cause of death, and the crime scene. State v Carter (1994) 338 NC 569, 451 SE2d 157.

Two photographs showing a murder victim's body as it was discovered, four photographs from the autopsy, and ten slides from the autopsy, all of which were in color, were not unfairly prejudicial or unduly repetitive, and defendant was not prejudiced by the manner in which they were presented to the jury, where they were admitted to illustrate the position and condition of the body when found and various injuries sustained by the victim when he was dragged behind defendant's logging truck. The photographs and slides were not irrelevant because defendant admitted dragging the victim behind his truck and leaving the victim on the side of the road since they supported the jury's finding that the murder was premeditated and deliberate. State v House (1995) 340 NC 187, 456 SE2d 292.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in a capital first-degree murder prosecution by admitting photographs of the victims at the crime scene and at the autopsy and the blood stained clothes of one of the victims. The pictures were admitted to illustrate testimony describing the position of the victims, the various injuries sustained by the victims, and the damage done to the neighborhood by defendant; the testimony was relevant and probative to the State's case against defendant; and the photographs and clothing submitted during the sentencing proceeding established the severity and brutality of the attack on one of the victims, India Anderson, and was admissible to support the especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel aggravating circumstance. State v Lynch (1995) 340 NC 435, 459 SE2d 679.

The trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to exclude photographs of the murder victim as inflammatory and unfairly prejudicial, since the photographs were illustrative of testimony regarding the nature and number of the victim's wounds, the condition of the body upon discovery, and the crime scene. State v Williams (1995) 341 NC 1, 459 SE2d 208.

Even if a photograph of the murder victim lying behind a bar amidst a number of broken bottles was found to be inflammatory, it was still properly admitted into evidence in order to demonstrate the state of disarray of the bar and the severity of the struggle between the victim and his attacker. Commonwealth v Rompilla (1995, Pa) 653 A2d 626.

§ 965 Authentication or verification; use of photograph to illustrate testimony

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A photograph used to illustrate the testimony of a witness is admissible in evidence, in both civil 40 and criminal cases 41 if it is authenticated or verified by some other evidence to establish that the photograph is a substantially true, accurate, and faithful representation or portrayal of the place, person, or subject it purports to represent or portray. Ordinarily, testimony that an exhibit is a fair and accurate portrayal of the scene at the time pertinent to the inquiry is sufficient to satisfy the requirement that the scene is accurate. 42

The requirement of authentication is satisfied by testimony of bank employees that surveillance photographs of a robbery in a bank were what they were claimed to be. 43 Testimony of expert witnesses familiar with the installation and maintenance of the camera is not necessary. 44

A photograph may also be properly admitted absent explicit testimony that the photograph is an accurate depiction where it is clear by implication from the witness' testimony that the photograph accurately depicts what the photograph purports to show. 45 Further, where photographs are introduced as evidence of the crime itself, and not as illustrative evidence, there is no need to have a witness testify that they fairly and accurately represented the scenes, objects, people and position of the people they purported to portray. 46

Generally, in order to establish a photograph's accuracy, 47 a witness must be able to identify the person, place, or thing shown in the photograph. 48 However, there is no need to establish a chain of custody for an object depicted in the photograph. 49 In a criminal prosecution, the court will assume in the absence of a showing to the contrary that the government did not deliberately alter a scene before photographing it to cause the photograph to misrepresent the facts. 50

§ 965 ----Authentication or verification; use of photograph to illustrate testimony [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Two photographs purportedly depicting defendant as a child and as a high school senior were not properly authenticated so that their exclusion was not erroneous where the witness through whom defendant sought to introduce the photographs did not know defendant at the time the photographs were taken. State v Lee (1994) 335 NC 244, 439 SE2d 547.

Five photographs depicting defendant's extensive destruction of the contents of the home he shared with his wife were properly admitted to illustrate the testimony of three witnesses that on the night of a murder and other crimes defendant acted overtly hostile and with inexplicable violence toward his wife, notwithstanding defendant admitted destroying most of the property shown in the photographs, where the photographs were not used excessively or repetitively during the trial, and the probative value of the photographs was not outweighed by the potential prejudice to defendant. State v Barlowe (1994) 337 NC 371, 446 SE2d 352.

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder prosecution by admitting photographs of defendant's automobile where defendant contended that the witness's testimony did not indicate that she had any knowledge regarding the identity of the automobile other than that which she gained from viewing the photograph. A photograph depicting an automobile that the witness said "looked like" the defendant's automobile was sufficient to authenticate the photograph for the purpose of illustrating the witness's testimony. The fact that the witness stated that the automobile resembled a Toyota while defendant's automobile was a Volkswagen goes to the credibility of the evidence and not to its admissibility. State v Vick (1995) 341 NC 569, 461 SE2d 655.

In an action to recover for injuries sustained by plaintiff pedestrian when he was struck by a car driven by defendant, the trial court did not err in excluding testimony and photographs regarding the skid marks found at the scene of the accident, since testimony of other witnesses was identical to the excluded testimony, and a witness testified as to the subject matter of the photographs. Bowden v Bell (1994) 116 NC App 64, 446 SE2d 816.

Before and after photographs of defendants' home were properly admitted to illustrate testimony that defendants' replacement of wood clapboard siding on their home with vinyl siding did not change the appearance of their home. Raintree Homeowners Ass'n v Bleimann (1994) 116 NC App 561, 449 SE2d 13, review gr 338 NC 669, 453 SE2d 180.

In robbery prosecution, clerk of store at which robbery occurred properly authenticated still photographs created from videotape reproducing robbery scene, when clerk identified scenes shown in photographs; prosecution was not obligated to call as witness individual who prepared photographs from videotape. Luckette v State (1995, Tex App Amarillo) 906 SW2d 663, petition for discretionary review ref (Jan 17, 1996).

In prosecution for murder resulting from bank robbery, it was unnecessary that all and each of photographs of robbery be authenticated and verified by testimony based on witnesses' observation, where eyewitness examined photographs produced by camera and was able to identify large number of them as truly and accurately depicting what she had seen, evidence showed that film in camera was unexposed before robbery and that camera was inspected and in good working order, there was clear testimony as to retrieval and chain of custody of film, and unrefuted testimony indicated method used to process and print films and fact that they had not been retouched or altered; photographs depicting police officer who had been killed in robbery were adequately authenticated and verified by testimony of officer's widow. Averhart v State (Ind) 470 NE2d 666, cert den 471 US 1030, 85 L Ed 2d 323, 105 S Ct 2051, post-conviction proceeding (Ind) 614 NE2d 924, reh den (Oct 20, 1993).

In murder prosecution, photographs of victim's mother's swollen face, taken by police, and introduced for the purpose of showing that defendant had hit her in the face with his fist, was sufficiently authenticated, where the mother testified that the photograph looked just like she had when she looked in the mirror after the incident Carroll v State, 263 Ind 696, 338 NE2d 264.

In prosecution for murder, foundation was sufficient for introduction of photograph of victim standing next to mother where mother was asked whether photo fairly and accurately depicted height and weight of her son at the time he was shot, and not whether photo was fair and accurate representation of what it purported to show, and where there was no objection to form of question at trial. § 966 --By whom photograph may be verified

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A photograph's accuracy may be verified by the person who took the photograph, 51 by a person who was present at the time the photograph was taken, 52 by the photographer and a third person, 53 or by a third person alone. 54 It is not ordinarily necessary to verify or authenticate a photograph through the person who took the picture, 55 but rather, any person having the required knowledge of the facts may verify or authenticate the photograph. 56 Where a witness other than the photographer verifies a photograph, he need not be in the photograph, 57 or have seen the photographer take the picture in order to qualify as a verifying witness. 58

In order to properly authenticate a photograph under the Federal Rules of Evidence, 59 it is necessary to show that chances are sufficiently remote that either the photograph is distorted and technically inaccurate as a representation of the scene photographed, or that the photograph portrays a scene materially different from the scene that is relevant to the issues at trial. 60 The quantum of authentication, by showing that a photograph is reasonably accurate and correct, in order to render it admissible in evidence must be considered in a relative sense, 61 and authentication does not require strict mathematical accuracy. 62 The fact that there is conflicting evidence as to the accuracy of a photograph does not require its exclusion; if witnesses for the party offering the photograph testify that it is substantially correct, it may be admitted, and its correctness then becomes a question for the jury. 63 If the photograph is not substantially correct, but is nevertheless admissible because sufficiently correct to be helpful, 64 its verification may consist of explaining the inaccuracies. 65 Accordingly, a lack of accuracy will generally go to the weight and not the admissibility of the evidence. 66

The question whether a photograph is sufficiently correct or accurate to justify its admission in evidence is a preliminary one to be determined by the trial court, and in this respect the trial court has a certain measure of discretion. 67

§ 966 --By whom photograph may be verified [SUPPLEMENT]Case authorities:

In an action to recover for injuries sustained by plaintiff pedestrian when he was struck by a car driven by defendant, the trial court did not err in excluding testimony and photographs regarding the skid marks found at the scene of the accident, since testimony of other witnesses was identical to the excluded testimony, and a witness testified as to the subject matter of the photographs. Bowden v Bell (1994) 116 NC App 64, 446 SE2d 816.

§ 967 --Use of photograph as probative of matter depicted

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Generally, photographs offered as demonstrative evidence are admissible when it can be shown that they are a true and accurate representation of the scene which the purport to represent. 68 However, in certain circumstances, photographs may be admissible under the "silent witness" theory—the theory that when used as probative evidence, photographic evidence takes on the status of a "mute," "silent," or "dumb" independent photographic witness 69 –without testimony by a witness that the photographs are a true and accurate representation of the scene which the photographs purport to represent, provided that a sufficient foundation is adduced to show the circumstances under which the photograph was taken and the reliability of the production process. 70 This approach is reflected in the Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence under which evidence describing a process or system used to produce a result and showing that the process or system produces an accurate result is sufficient to meet the requirement of authentication or identification as a condition precedent to admissibility. 71

Case authorities:

Stove manufacturer laid proper foundation for admission of photographs taken after accident giving rise to product liability lawsuit since only claims it made were that photographs depicted fuel canisters in stove and were taken sometime after accident, plaintiff stipulated that photographs depicted fuel canisters, and record indicated that photographs originated from one of three sources, all of whom took photographs after accident. Banghart v Origoverken, A.B. (1995, CA8 Minn) 49 F3d 1302.

In personal injury action, trial court did not err in admitting videotapes (and photographs) of plaintiff taken by defendant's surveillance witnesses, though plaintiff's interrogatories requested information as to whether photographs existed relevant to case and defendant initially answered "no," where defendant subsequently obtained photographs and videotapes depicting plaintiff engaging in certain activities and then amended his interrogatories to include surveillance witnesses as witnesses and to amend his prior answer to advise plaintiff that "photographs" existed of him. If term "photographs" included all forms of photographs, including videotapes, then plaintiff was advised by defendant's letter that "photographs" (in general sense) existed; answer incorporated term used by plaintiff in his interrogatory. However, if "photographs" did not include "videotapes," then defendant had no obligation to advise plaintiff's attorney of existence of that for which he did not ask. Nor was there any unfair surprise to plaintiff; defendant fairly apprised plaintiff of information requested and, as such, complied with his obligation to provide discovery. Had plaintiff's attorney requested opportunity to view photographs, opportunity would have been afforded; had he inquired, and/or viewed photographs, any request to see videotapes would have been honored or court would have so ordered. Kiss v Jacob (1993, App Div) 268 NJ Super 235, 633 A2d 544.

Five photographs depicting defendant's extensive destruction of the contents of the home he shared with his wife were properly admitted to illustrate the testimony of three witnesses that on the night of a murder and other crimes defendant acted overtly hostile and with inexplicable violence toward his wife, notwithstanding defendant admitted destroying most of the property shown in the photographs, where the photographs were not used excessively or repetitively during the trial, and the probative value of the photographs was not outweighed by the potential prejudice to defendant. State v Barlowe (1994) 337 NC 371, 446 SE2d 352.

The trial court in a homicide prosecution did not err in admitting a photograph of defendant holding a can of beer and wearing a shoulder holster containing a .357 caliber revolver, since the photograph was admissible to illustrate a witness's testimony concerning defendant's possession and control of the murder weapon. State v Thibodeaux (1995) 341 NC 53, 459 SE2d 501.

In an action to recover for injuries sustained by plaintiff pedestrian when he was struck by a car driven by defendant, the trial court did not err in excluding testimony and photographs regarding the skid marks found at the scene of the accident, since testimony of other witnesses was identical to the excluded testimony, and a witness testified as to the subject matter of the photographs. Bowden v Bell (1994) 116 NC App 64, 446 SE2d 816.

Before and after photographs of defendants' home were properly admitted to illustrate testimony that defendants' replacement of wood clapboard siding on their home with vinyl siding did not change the appearance of their home. Raintree Homeowners Ass'n v Bleimann (1994) 116 NC App 561, 449 SE2d 13, review gr 338 NC 669, 453 SE2d 180.

In prosecution for robbery and confinement, competency and authenticity of photograph taken by automatic camera in bank's automatic teller machine was established under "silent witness theory," where bank's security officer testified that automatic camera was activated when bank customer inserted card into teller machine and that while in completed transaction there would be total of three photographs taken, there was only one photograph of defendant because teller machine would not complete his attempted withdrawal due to improper code number; security officer also pointed out that date, time of transaction, and number of transaction were imprinted on film and that transaction number on photograph of defendant corresponded exactly to transaction number on teller machine audit tape. Stark v State (Ind) 489 NE2d 43.

§ 968 Effect of time of taking photograph; change of conditions

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The time at which a photograph offered in evidence was taken is important only with reference to the question of change, or probability of change, in the condition of the person or object portrayed. 72 If the situation and surrounding circumstances of the taking of a picture are subject to change, a photograph, to be admissible, must have been taken at the time of the occurrence in question or before the situation and circumstances have undergone substantial change. 73 In many instances photographs have not been admitted because they were taken at a time too remote and when conditions had materially changed. 74 The mere fact, however, that photographs were taken at a time different from that in question does not render them inadmissible if witnesses are able to verify them as substantial representations of the conditions as they existed at the time in question. 75 The fact that conditions were somewhat changed before a photograph was taken does not render the photograph inadmissible if the changes were not material, provided such change is satisfactorily explained. 76 Where there is conflicting evidence as to the similarity of conditions at the time of the accident and at the time the photographs are made, the admissibility of the exhibits is within the sound discretion of the trial judge. 77 Thus, a photograph of an accident site taken months after the incident is admissible at the discretion of the trial judge where the photograph is offered primarily to demonstrate where the accident occurred and not to depict the condition of the site on the day where the accident occurred. 78 Similarly, a photograph taken after ground conditions changed following a rain storm may be admitted to show the general layout of the work site where the plaintiff was injured so long as the jury is informed that the photographs do not purport to represent the ground conditions at the time of the accident. 79

In criminal cases, there is no particular period of time within which, after the crime, the photograph must have been taken. 80 Any doubt as to whether conditions depicted in the photograph are the same as when the crime occurred should go to its weight and not to its admissibility as long as it is a fair reproduction of what it is claimed to represent. 81

Even where a photograph of the place at issue does not reflect conditions identical in every detail with those existing at the time in question, it may nevertheless be admitted into evidence for an expressly limited purpose if, as to such purpose, it is a helpful and accurate illustration, and further if, in the discretion of the trial court, its admission will not be misleading or prejudicial as to those conditions which it does not portray accurately. 82 If a photograph tells the truth about the situation and surroundings so far as it purports to show these things, it ought not to be excluded simply because it does not show some of the surroundings, the showing of which has, by the time the photograph is taken, become impossible. 83

Where a photograph is admissible in evidence notwithstanding a change in conditions between the time material to the litigation and the time the photograph was taken, the party offering it must produce evidence fully explaining the change. 84

§ 968 ----Effect of time of taking photograph; change of conditions [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in the denial of defendant's pretrial motion to exclude two photographs of the bodies of two murder and rape victims depicting enlarged wounds caused by decomposition and small animals where the photographs were in black and white and showed the condition and location of the victims' bodies at the time they were found; the photographs illustrated the testimony of the forensic pathologist who conducted the autopsies about the injuries inflicted on the victims, including testimony that it was impossible to determine from the autopsy whether the victims had been strangled or sexually assaulted due to decomposition of the bodies; and there was no evidence that the photographs were used excessively and solely to inflame the passions and prejudices of the jury against defendant. State v Gregory (1995) 340 NC 365, 459 SE2d 638.

In wrongful death action, where photographs were identified and stated to be accurate representation of roadway at time of accident, except that road had been widened slightly and painted fog line had been added on both sides, changes in road were adequately explained when exhibits were offered into evidence and did not make photographs deceptive, and photographs could properly be admitted. Riksem v Hollister, 96 Idaho 15, 523 P2d 1361.

Photographs which incidently revealed that repairs were made subsequent to the alleged accident were properly admitted in slip and fall action where the photographs were the only known pictures of the scene where the plaintiff claimed he fell, and the photographs would contribute to a fuller understanding of the issues in the case. *E.V.R. Although photographs showed a building abutting a street at a different stage of completion from the time of the accident, and the presence of debris on the sidewalk, the admissibility of the photographs was not impaired if, as testified by several witnesses, they correctly showed the condition of the pavement 15 feet out into the street from the curbstone, where a hole was alleged to have thrown an automobile out of control. Saporito v New York, 14 NY2d 474, 253 NYS2d 985, 202 NE2d 369.

The admission in evidence, in an action on an account for labor and materials in remodeling a house, of photographs of various parts of the building some 2 years after the plaintiff's employment had ceased and additional work had been done on the premises, rested in the sound discretion of the trial court where the photographs were properly identified as correctly reflecting the conditions at the time they were made and there was evidence as to the changes that had been effected. Shears v Von Tulganburg (App, Franklin Co) 77 Ohio L Abs 188, 148 NE2d 926.

The exclusion, in a negligence action arising from a collision, of a photograph taken of a truck involved in the collision on the day following the accident was proper in the absence of testimony that the condition of the truck was essentially the same as it was immediately following the accident. Giffin v Ensign (CA3 Pa) 234 F2d 307.

In a suit involving a truck collision, an objection to a photograph showing the highway after the accident on the ground that the witness identifying it had not compared it with a previously admitted photograph showing the position of the truck after the accident, was obviated where the witness testified that the photographs were identical except that in the second one the truck had been removed. Reynolds v Nutt, 217 Ark 543, 230 SW2d 949.

§ 969 Enlarged photographs; photographs joined together

View Entire Section
Go to Supplement

A duplicate is defined in the Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence to include photographic enlargements, 85 and a duplicate is admissible to the same extent as an original unless (1) a genuine question is raised as to the authenticity of the original, or (2) in the circumstances it would be unfair to admit the duplicate instead of the original. 86 Accordingly, a photograph or slide is not rendered inadmissible because it has been enlarged, 87 where it appears to have been properly authenticated and to be material to an issue in the case, 88 and does not tend to mislead the jury. 89 In the case of photographs of wounds, the contention that enlargements tend to exaggerate the size of the wounds and will prejudice the jury has been rejected where there is no claim, aside from the enlargement, that there is any distortion or inaccuracy. 90 As in the case of the admission of photographs generally, 91 it is recognized that the admission in evidence of enlarged photographs rests in the discretion of the trial court, which will not be reversed on appeal unless clearly in error. 92 In many instances it has been noted that the use of photographic enlargements is comparable to the use of magnifying glasses or microscopes. 93 Thus, a photomicrograph of skin sections 94 or of cuts made on a tree 95 are admissible.

An enlarged photograph may be admitted into evidence to illustrate the testimony of a witness, 96 to show the place, 97 cause, 98 or results 99 of an accident or injury; to show, in an action for wrongful death, the persons killed; 1 and to show printed maps or illustrations. 2

Failure to lay a proper foundation for the admission of enlargements in evidence may result in their exclusion. 3 An enlarged photograph may also be excluded if it alters the original by excluding a part of it. 4

Individual photographs, otherwise competent evidence which have been joined together to form a panoramic view, are admissible provided there is no deception, distortion, or inaccuracy between the actual area and the photographs of the area. 5

§ 970 Color photographs

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

If a photograph is otherwise admissible in evidence, the fact that it is a color photograph is ordinarily no reason for excluding it from evidence. Indeed, it has been noted that even though they may be equally admissible, colored photographs may provide superior information 6 or augment the accuracy of the jury's perception of the scene as compared with black-and-white photographs. 7 After proper authentication, color photographs have been commonly used, chiefly in criminal cases or actions for personal injuries or wrongful death, to show the condition of the victim of the crime or accident, and their use has generally been upheld as against the contention that they are gruesome or inflammatory, 8 or it has been held that their probative value outweighed any potentially inflammatory effect on the jury. 9 On the other hand, if the probable inflammatory and prejudicial effect of such pictures or slides far outweighs their potential evidentiary or probative value, 10 or if they are irrelevant or have no probative value, 11 they should be excluded. 12 Colored photographs may also be excluded where they would mislead the jury because of the fact that the colors are incorrectly portrayed. 13 In any event, the admissibility or rejection of colored photographs is a matter resting within the discretion of the trial judge, and the trial judge's determination in this respect will not be disturbed except for manifest error or an abuse of discretion. 14

Where the retouching or retinting process on a photographic portrait, apparently originally taken by a camera as a black-and-white picture, has not had the effect of impairing the accuracy of the picture, or where any possible distortions have been explained so that they could be discounted by the jury, admissibility has been upheld. 15

In an action under the Jones Act for the drowning of the decedent during his employment by the defendant, a color picture showing the decedent in his casket was admissible in connection with testimony introduced by the plaintiff concerning the decedent's pain and suffering, and the question whether or not the picture showed evidence of swelling and physical markings on the decedent's neck and face was for the jury. In an action for personal injuries sustained as a result of an automobile accident, it was not error for the trial court to admit into evidence color photographs of plaintiff lying on a Stryker frame with Crutchfield tongs attached to his scalp since the photographs were not inflammatory and assisted the jury in understanding the medical evidence. Admission into evidence of color photograph of victim's shower area, in which there was bucket filled with cloudy reddish liquid, was proper as being sufficiently relevant where testimony was that defendant, after beating up victim, had helped him into shower in order to stop nose bleed with cold water. People v Reynolds, 194 Colo 543, 575 P2d 1286.

In prosecution for assault and battery, unarmed robbery, and assault with intent to commit rape, defendant's concession that victim had been severely beaten and had bleed profusely did not make color photograph of victim after assault inadmissible. Commonwealth v Torres, 367 Mass 737, 327 NE2d 871.

Two color photographs depicting injuries inflicted upon one of correction officers in assault by prison inmates were properly admitted into evidence, where photographs were probative of element of crime charged that defendant inflicted physical injury on peace officer when officer was in course of performing his duties; fact that photographs might arouse sympathy of jury was not sufficient to exclude evidence. Where the sole issue in the case was whether the killing was done in the heat of passion or intentionally, the admission of colored slides taken during the autopsy, shocking and emotionally disturbing to the mind of an average individual, was inherently prejudicial when the slides were of no probative value. State v Morris, 245 La 175, 157 So 2d 728.

In a manslaughter prosecution of a parent for failure to provide a 5-month-old child with food, the trial court should not have admitted color slides taken after a post mortem, where the doctor stated that he did not need the slide to explain the findings, although it was helpful, and the slide showed ghastly and gruesome-looking sores or scars caused by dermatitis burns which did not go to the proof of starvation, and there was no charge of failure to provide medical care. (b). Photographs of Persons [971-974]

§ 971 Generally

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table Go to Supplement

A photograph of a person or of some part of the body which is shown to be a proper representation of its subject is admissible to prove the person's appearance or condition at the time of any injuries, 16 or to prove the condition of, or the nature or extent of injuries or wounds, to, the part of the body photographed, 17 as the case may be, provided the photograph is not more prejudicial than probative. 18 Thus, photographs of injuries taken during a course of treatment which are accurately reflective of the injuries and the treatment which plaintiff had to undergo are properly admitted. 19 In a personal injury action where recovery is sought for permanent disfigurement, photographs taken before the injury, where properly authenticated, are also admissible. 20

§ 971 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In robbery prosecution, photo of lineup was properly admitted, even though flash may have caused more detail to come through stockings that were worn over heads, where evidence was not so inherently suggestive that it gave rise to very substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification. State v Lewis (1994, Mo App) 874 SW2d 420.

In a prosecution for the first-degree murder of an undercover officer involved in a drug investigation, a photograph of the victim wearing his police uniform and standing in front of a patrol car was not introduced merely to inflame the passions of the jury but was properly admitted to illustrate a detective's testimony concerning the size and weight of the victim where defendant's defense of self-defense necessitated a showing by the State that a much larger man attacked the victim and knocked him down and defendant then shot and killed him. State v Bell (1994) 338 NC 363, 450 SE2d 710.

§ 972 Admissibility of photograph to show identity or resemblance

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A properly authenticated photograph is admissible in criminal cases to establish the identity of the defendant, 21 or victim. 22 Where the photograph is introduced in evidence for the purpose of establishing identity, testimony that the photograph looks like the person whose identity is being established is a sufficient basic introduction of the photograph, and it is not necessary to show who took the picture, or where, when, or how it was taken. 23

Further, an unauthenticated photograph may be used to show identity where the prosecution witness makes an in-court identification of the defendant and subsequently corroborates his own testimony by identifying the photograph, at which point, the court can consider the photograph and make its own observation as to whether the photograph resembles the defendant. 24 Additionally, a photograph taken by a regiscope—a device which simultaneously photographs check being presented, person presenting it and that person's identification 25 —purporting to be that of accused may be properly admitted into evidence. 26

Photographs are also admissible in evidence for the purpose of supporting statements as to race and family resemblance, 27 particularly in cases involving matters of paternity 28 and succession, 29 provided the photograph is shown to be a good likeness. Proof of the accuracy of a photograph of a person may be made by the testimony of one who was familiar with the appearance of the person at the time the photograph was taken. 30

§ 973 --Mug shots

View Entire Section

A "mug shot" or "rogues' gallery" photograph of the accused taken in a police department or prison, intended to be used for the purpose of identification, has been deemed admissible in certain instances, 31 but not in others. 32 In order for mug shots to be admissible: (1) the government must have a demonstrable need to introduce the photographs; and (2) the photographs themselves, if shown to the jury, must not imply that the defendant has a prior criminal record; and (3) the manner of introduction at trial must be such that it does not draw particular attention to the source or implications of the photograph. 33 If the government fails to meet these standards, the admission of the mug shot may be reversible error. 34 The admissibility of a photograph taken at a police station is not dependant upon whether or not the defendant had consented to the taking of the photograph. 35

Case authorities:

Admission of photospread did not constitute plain error where government introduced it to strengthen inspector's identification testimony and defense mounted effective attack against this testimony, photographs possessed no characteristics identifying them as police mugshots, and manner in which they were introduced drew no particular attention to source or implications of photographs. United States v Carrillo-Figueroa (1994, CA1 Puerto Rico) 34 F3d 33.

Mugshot which had been trimmed to eliminate any reference to local police department and which showed change in defendant's appearance between time of photo and time of trial was properly admitted where offered to prove extrajudicial identification of defendant and court instructed jury that photograph showed only that defendant had been arrested and was not to be construed as evidence of prior criminal record. In prosecution for robbery and other offenses, admission of photographic array which had been used in pretrial identification of defendant was proper, where photographs were not referred to as "mugshots" in presence of jury and jury never saw photographs, so that it could not have inferred that defendant had engaged in prior criminal conduct. Commonwealth v Cambridge, 386 Pa Super 542, 563 A2d 515, app den 525 Pa 624, 578 A2d 411.

Notwithstanding that the better practice would dictate removal of police identification marks before a photograph is introduced before the jury, a "mug shot" taken of a defendant immediately subsequent to his arrest and admitted as rebuttal evidence on the issue that the police had physically abused him is properly admitted into evidence where the photograph in no way suggested that the defendant had previous encounters with the police. Reyes v State (Tex Crim) 579 SW2d 927.

In an action for wrongful death, 36 photographs of the decedent taken during his life may be material to an issue in the case and are admissible, 37 provided the photograph is shown to be an accurate and faithful representation of the decedent. 38 Thus, in a wrongful death action, a decedent's photograph may properly be admitted to show his state of well-being prior to his death, 39 or to show his conscious pain and suffering, lost earnings, and services of value he could have performed for family. 40 The admission or rejection of such photographs is largely a matter within the trial court's discretion, 41 and there does not appear to be any particular limitation as to the time within which the photograph must have been taken, although in most of the cases where the time of taking was stated by the court, the photographs were of comparatively recent origin. 42 However, a photograph of the decedent taken during his life is not admissible in a wrongful death action when the only apparent object of offering the photograph in evidence is to prejudice the jury against the defendant. 43

A photograph of the corpse of the victim of the alleged wrongful act is admissible in evidence, in the discretion of the trial court, even though gruesome in nature, provided the photograph is relevant to the inquiry and is properly identified. 44 In other words, potentially gruesome photographs may be admitted where the photographs are not so gruesome that their prejudicial potential absolutely requires their exclusion. 45 Accordingly, in wrongful death actions, relevant post-death pictures of a decedent showing extensive injuries may properly be admitted as evidence of decedent's physical pain and suffering before death. 46 However, such photographs are not admissible in evidence where they can be of no help to the jury in determining the issues submitted, but will only serve to prejudice the jury in favor of the plaintiff. 47

On the basis that the physical condition of a testator is relevant to his mental condition, a photograph shown to be a correct representation of the testator at or about the time he

Case authorities:

There was no plain error in a prosecution in which defendant was convicted of first-degree murder, first-degree rape, and first-degree sexual offense in the trial court's failure to give a limiting instruction on the use of photographs of the victim in another trial in which defendant was also convicted where the evidence had been properly admitted. The jury is properly permitted to consider all the evidence presented during the guilt- innocence phase and it was appropriate for the jury to consider the evidence in finding the course of conduct aggravating circumstance. State v Moseley (1994) 338 NC 1, 449 SE2d 412.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in a prosecution which resulted in convictions for first- degree murder, first-degree rape, and first-degree sexual offense by admitting photographs and slides into evidence during the guilt- innocence phase and the sentencing phase where there was no evidence that the photographs were used excessively and solely to arouse the passions of the jury. The photographs of this victim, and the victim from another trial where defendant was also convicted, including photographs of their genitalia, were introduced to illustrate the theory that both victims were killed by the same person and that that person was defendant. State v Moseley (1994) 338 NC 1, 449 SE2d 412.

The trial court did not err in a noncapital first-degree murder prosecution by allowing into evidence twenty gruesome photographs of the crime scene and the victim and in allowing the photographs to be held in front of the jury where the display of the photographs was not unnecessarily repetitious and they were used to illustrate competent testimony. State v Corbett (1994) 339 NC 313, 451 SE2d 252.

The trial court did not err in a noncapital first-degree murder prosecution by admitting photographs depicting the victim's body in the backseat of an automobile which was wrecked on the way to the hospital following a shooting. The challenged photographs were used for illustrative purposes by several witnesses, nothing suggested that the photographs were used to incense the jurors or incite their prejudices and passions against defendant, and the State made no attempt to draw undue attention to these photographs. State v Alford (1995) 339 NC 562, 453 SE2d 512.

The trial court did not err in a noncapital first-degree murder prosecution by admitting a photograph of the victim in his casket in a funeral home where no autopsy or criminal investigation was conducted at the time of the victim's death in 1973, no photographs were taken of the victim as he appeared at the time of his death other than this photograph, only the victim's bones remained when the body was exhumed, and this photograph was the only physical evidence to illustrate testimony about the condition of the victim's body shortly after the time of his death. Moreover, the photograph and accompanying testimony were relevant to establish the corpus delicti of the crime. State v White (1995) 340 NC 264, 457 SE2d 841.

A family photograph of the two murder victims, taken while they were alive, was properly admitted in defendant's murder trial where the photographs were used for illustrative purposes during testimony by the victim's nephew describing the victims while alive. State v Goode (1995) 341 NC 513, 461 SE2d 631.

Although a tinted photograph of the deceased was apparently made some years prior to his death, the court in Trammell v Matthews, 86 Ga App 661, 72 SE2d 132, held that it would have been admissible had the proper foundation been laid by evidence showing that the picture was a correct likeness of the deceased at the approximate time of his death.

In wrongful death action, admission of nine-year old photograph showing his state of well-being prior to his death was not prejudicial, although perhaps improper. Fedt v Oak Lawn Lodge, Inc. (1st Dist) 132 Ill App 3d 1061, 88 Ill Dec 154, 478 NE2d 469.

Where a display of grief by the mother accompanied the introduction of a photograph of her dead child, the court in O'Meara v Haiden, 204 Cal 354, 268 P 334, 60 ALR 1381, noting that there was no dispute as to the identity of the deceased and stating that no purpose for introducing the picture appeared in the record and that none was apparent unless it was to unduly prejudice the jury, held that under the facts of the case the procedure was harmless error since liability was clear and the verdict not excessive, but that in a closely contested case a reversal would be necessary.

Photographs that are calculated to arouse the sympathies or prejudice of the jury are properly excluded, particularly if they are not substantially necessary or instructive to show material facts or conditions; thus, a photograph of a child 12 months old, taken 5 months before the fatal accident, is not relevant or material and should not be admitted. Wright v Kelly, 203 Va 135, 122 SE2d 670.

In a wrongful death action, color pictures showing the decedent in his casket are admissible in connection with testimony introduced by the plaintiff concerning pain and suffering before death, and the question whether or not such color pictures showed evidence of swelling and physical markings on the neck and face was for the jury to decide. Presley v Upper Mississippi Towing Corp. (La App 1st Cir) 153 So 2d 416, cert den 244 La 1002, 156 So 2d 56 and cert den 244 La 1003, 156 So 2d 56.

Where plaintiff in personal injury action was entitled to recover damages for emotional distress caused by injuries to and death of her fiance occurring in same accident, photograph of decedent would be admitted at trial provided it met requirements of Federal Rule of Evidence 403 that its probative value outweigh any prejudicial impact it might have. Pieters v B-Right Trucking, Inc. (ND Ind) 669 F Supp 1463, 24 Fed Rules Evid Serv 17.

Trial judge did not abuse discretion in ruling in action for wrongful death arising from motor vehicle accident that photographs of decedent were not so inflammatory or gruesome as to outweigh their probative value in assisting jury's determination of extent of decedent's pain and suffering. Bullard v Barnes, 102 Ill 2d 505, 82 Ill Dec 448, 468 NE2d 1228.

(c). Photographs of Premises and Objects [975, 976]

§ 975 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Photographic pictures or representations of places are admissible if verified as a correct representation of the locality, provided they are material to the controversy and will be of assistance to the jury. 49 The rule is that when it becomes material to show the location, surroundings, and condition of the premises upon which the accident, injury, or crime in controversy occurred, or to show the nature or condition of a structure or object involved in the litigation, photographs of it are generally admissible as evidence, 50 insofar as they are properly authenticated by showing that they correctly represent what they purport to depict, 51 and provided there have not been such changes between the accident or occurrence and the time when the photographs were taken as to destroy substantial identity. 52 Accordingly, in criminal cases, a properly authenticated photograph is admissible to show, in a prosecution involving theft, the stolen property 53 cash or a check, 54 clothing, 55 jewelry, 56 a vehicle, 57 the scene of the crime, 58 hand and footprints, 59 tire tracks, 60 blood stains at the scene of the crime, 61 the place where the victim was found, 62 or the weapon used by the defendant. 63 If, however, the photograph does not, for any reason, appear to represent the subject or the conditions existing at the time of the occurrence in controversy in such a way as to be instructive, 64 or was not taken so as to exemplify correctly the situation and the surroundings at that time, 65 or if the accuracy and correctness of the photograph is not properly or sufficiently shown, 66 it is inadmissible. A mere change in the appearance of a locality, arising from photographs having been taken at different seasons of the year, is open to explanation. 67

Where photographs are offered to show distances, relative sizes, or locations of objects, much more convincing proof of their accuracy is required than in ordinary cases. 68

§ 975 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court did not err in a noncapital first-degree murder prosecution by allowing into evidence twenty gruesome photographs of the crime scene and the victim and in allowing the photographs to be held in front of the jury where the display of the photographs was not unnecessarily repetitious and they were used to illustrate competent testimony. State v Corbett (1994) 339 NC 313, 451 SE2d 252.

In a prosecution arising from the murder of a police officer during his attempt to arrest the defendant in connection with an assault from which the defendant was fleeing, it was not error for the court to permit the prosecutor to introduce into evidence photographs of the defendant's hotel room which depicted graffiti stating "Fuck the Police" since the expression revealed the defendant's general malicious attitude towards police officers and was relevant to show that he had a fixed bias against police officers and that such bias could have contributed to his motive for and malice in the shooting of the officer. Commonwealth v Lacava (Pa) 666 A2d 221.

The same general principles which apply to the admissibility of photographs generally 69 apply to aerial photographs, 70 and in a number of cases, aerial photographs have been admitted into evidence for the purpose of giving the jury a picture of some relevant fact in issue, where witnesses familiar with the subject matter testified that they were an accurate and true representation of the scene depicted. 71 Aerial photographs have not been admitted, however, where they were not accurate, 72 not properly authenticated, 73 or where it appeared that other evidence gave the jury a sufficiently accurate picture of the subject matter involved. 74

(2). X-ray Pictures [977, 978]

§ 977 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The process of X-ray photography is now well established as a method of securing a reliable representation of the bones of the human body, the location of growths and foreign substances in the body, the condition of the tissues of the body. 75 Photographs are defined for the purposes of the article of the Federal Rules of Evidence relating to the contents of writings, recordings, and photographs, as including X-ray films. 76 X-ray pictures—also referred to as skiagraphs or radiographs—when shown to have been made under such circumstances and by such persons as to assure their accuracy, 77 and where relevant to a material issue in the case, are admissible in evidence, 78

Properly authenticated X-ray pictures are properly admitted in an action for personal injuries to show the condition of the interior tissues of an injured part of the body. 79 In criminal cases, an X-ray photograph is admissible to show the course and location of a bullet, 80 or the nature and extent of an injury. 81

In ruling on the admission of X-ray pictures, as in the case of ordinary photographs, 82 the trial court has reasonable latitude for the exercise of discretion. 83

◆ Observation: While case law exists in which courts have found it improper to allow the jury to see X-rays, these cases generally involve complex medical issues. 84

§ 978 Authentication or verification

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Under the Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence, evidence describing a process or system used to produce a result and showing that the process or system produces an accurate result is sufficient to meet the requirement of authentication or identification as a condition precedent to admissibility. 85 This method of authentication involves situations in which the accuracy of the result is dependent upon a process or system which produces it, such as X-rays. 86

In some jurisdictions, it is necessary in all cases where X-ray pictures are to be introduced into evidence that the proponent lay a proper foundation for their introduction, that is, they must be verified and authenticated by someone who has knowledge of the accuracy and correctness of the X-rays. 87 X-rays are properly authenticated when it is shown that the X-ray is of the person, anatomical part, or object involved in the case, 88 that the X-ray was made by a competent technician, and that the X-ray accurately portrays the condition of the person's body which the X-ray purports to represent. 89 Whether there is sufficient verification of an X-ray picture is a matter within the discretion of the trial court, and its ruling in this respect will not be interfered with on appeal except upon a clear showing of an abuse of discretion. 90

Proof of the identity of an X-ray is usually provided through the testimony of some qualified individual, most typically a physician, 91 or sometimes by means of a deposition furnished by an expert witness, usually a physician, 92 or by identification markings, usually corroborated by an X-ray technician or attending physician. 93

It has also been held that in verifying an X-ray picture, there should be proof that the condition of the person X-rayed was the same at the time the X-ray was taken as at the time in controversy, 94 and that the X-ray machine or other apparatus used was dependable and was operating properly at the time the X-ray was taken. 95 It has also often been held that before an X-ray can be admitted in evidence, it should be shown that the picture was taken by a person with knowledge and experience in the use of the X-ray process, such as a physician, 96 or an X-ray technician. 97 As an additional requirement, it has been held in a number of cases that the manner of taking the X-ray picture must be shown. 98 But in view of the fact that the science of taking X-ray pictures is now so well founded and generally recognized, it is not necessary for a witness to testify to the reliability and trustworthiness of X-ray pictures as such before admitting them in evidence. 99

The admissibility of X-ray photographs as evidence is often dependent on whether the photographs have been subject to interpretation by a properly qualified witness. 1 A person qualified to testify as an expert in the use of X-ray machines may, from the result produced, give an opinion as to whether the machine was operated in a proper manner. 2

(3). Motion Pictures and Videotape [979-985]

§ 979 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Photographs are defined for the purposes of the article of the Federal Rules of Evidence relating to the contents of writings, recordings, and photographs, as including motion pictures and videotapes. 3 The rules which apply to the admissibility of photographs also generally apply to that of motion pictures and videotapes. 4 Thus it is well established that motion pictures and videotapes, 5 when properly authenticated 6 and relevant to the issues in the case, 7 are admissible in evidence, 8 within the discretion of the trial court. 9 The issue to be determined in admitting or rejecting a videotape is whether it is practical, instructive, and calculated to assist the trier of fact in understanding the case. 10 A videotape's tone and editing, 11 as well as the availability of similar evidence through in court testimony, are all factors a trial court should consider when deciding whether to admit a videotape. 12 If a motion picture has a tendency to prejudice the jury, the question before the court is whether its value as evidence outweighs its possible prejudicial effect. 13 The prejudicial effect of a video tape is to be decided on a case-by-case basis. 14

Motion pictures and videotapes, secretly taken between the time the plaintiff received the injuries and the trial of the action in which recovery is sought, depicting the plaintiff engaged in various physical activities, have frequently been received in evidence on behalf of the defendant to demonstrate that the injuries were neither as extensive nor as permanent as claimed. 15

§ 979 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: Video Technology. 58 Am Jur Trials 481.

Case authorities:

In prosecution for sexual abuse of defendant's minor stepdaughter, trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that prejudicial effect of videotape of program regarding false allegations of sexual abuse in unrelated cases outweighed any probative value; defendant could make defense of false allegations without videotape, and he did not share characteristics of those on tape, that is, Jehovah's Witnesses involved in child custody or dissolution proceedings. United States v Foster (1994, CA7 Ind) 30 F3d 65.

Trial court in homicide prosecution arising from child-abuse death of two-year-old harmlessly erred in admitting videotaped re-enactment of abuse incident involving decedent's sister, in which defendant acted out false story of dropping sister while running to car to take her to doctor, where, although tape was cumulative to descriptive testimony of police officer who made video, tape was not inflammatory and was relevant to defendant's history of lying to conceal his abusive conduct. People v Evers (1992, 4th Dist) 10 Cal App 4th 588, 12 Cal Rptr 2d 637, 92 CDOS 8650, 92 Daily Journal DAR 14307, review den (Cal) 1993 Cal LEXIS 370.

In murder trial, defendant's videotaped statements made after shooting and in which defendant discussed his gang activities was properly admitted where purpose was to establish defendant's mens rea at time of shooting, jury was instructed that tape was admitted only for that limited purpose, and jurors were told that they could not speculate whether defendant acted in conformity with his gang activities. People v Atkins (1992, Colo App) 844 P2d 1196, cert den (Colo) 1993 Colo LEXIS 77.

In prosecution for child molestation, statutory rape, and aggravated child molestation, trial court did not commit reversible error by failing to allow defendant to introduce videotape of family outing to show that victim was not afraid of him and that victim called him "Daddy" rather than by his first name, "Larry," where at least four witnesses had testified from personal observation that victim was not afraid of defendant and called him "Daddy," thereby making such evidence cumulative. Stewart v State (1993) 210 Ga App 474, 436 SE2d 679, 93 Fulton County D R 3512, cert den (Ga) 1994 Ga LEXIS 189.

In prosecution for lewd and lascivious conduct with minor, videotaped interview of victim at children-at-risk evaluation services unit, which was introduced without objection and related to events for which defendant was on trial, would not be subject to review on appeal. In addition, exclusion of tape of earlier interview of victim about previous, unrelated suspicion of sexual molestation by someone else, which was not admitted on ground that it was irrelevant, was not subject to review in absence of copy of tape. State v Stover (1994, Idaho App) 881 P2d 553.

In prosecution for murder and theft, trial court did not err in admitting videotape showing autopsy of victim, which tape showed, inter alia, pathologist attempting to remove fluid with syringe from what remained of victim's brain, as well as extensive maggot infestation of body; while fluid removal had no tendency to prove any material issues in case, and no witness would have been permitted to describe visual impression made by videotape regarding maggot infestation, rest of tape was unobjectionable and some parts of it were highly probative. Meisberger v State (1994, Ind App) 640 NE2d 716, transfer den (Dec 21, 1994).

In murder prosecution, admission of 45-second videotape showing victim playing basketball was proper, as prosecution was permitted to briefly acquaint jurors with murder victim so as to give him distinct identity in jurors' minds. State v Hodgson (1994, Minn) 512 NW2d 95, subsequent civil proceeding (Minn App) 1994 Minn App LEXIS 305.

Admission into evidence of three tape recordings over defendant's objections was reversible error where there was no testimony identifying voices on tape, no evidence of chain of custody, and no expert testimony regarding enhancement of tapes. Caraway v

Where there was a question of fact concerning the presence of blood in elevator 4 in the cellblock in which a murder occurred, a videotape of the removal of the victim's body and its placement in elevator 2 was relevant to refute defendant inmates' suggestion that the blood came from the victim's body or from those who removed the body. State v Leazer (1994) 337 NC 454, 446 SE2d 54.

In DUI prosecution, trial court committed reversible error when it admitted audio portion of videotape of police interrogation in which defendant invoked his right to counsel; such evidence could be construed adversely to defendant by jury and could improperly be considered by jury as inference of guilt. Hardie v State (1991, Tex Crim) 807 SW2d 319.

Audio portion of postarrest videotape of defendant performing sobriety tests was not inadmissible since it did not show defendant exercising his constitutional right to remain silent; impression left by tape was that defendant remained silent because he did not understand due to hearing problem or because he wanted deputy to think he could not understand questions. Raffaelli v State (1994, Tex App Texarkana) 881 SW2d 714, petition for discretionary review ref (Nov 30, 1994).

Trial court in prosecution for driving under influence of alcohol properly admitted videotape of defendant's postarrest interrogation and field sobriety testing, where, because tape did not show defendant invoking right to remain silent (and therefore was not attempt to use silence against defendant), and because tape showed defendant's attempt to feign hearing impairment, tape was not admitted in violation of right to remain silent. Raffaelli v State (1994, Tex App Texarkana) 881 SW2d 714, petition for discretionary review ref (Nov 30, 1994).

Generally speaking, the law governing the admissibility of photographs applies to motion pictures—that is to say, they must be relevant to the issues and be properly authenticated before they may be introduced. Lanford v People, 159 Colo 36, 409 P2d 829.

The showing, in an action involving a collision between two airplanes, of a motion picture 4 or 5 minutes long, of the defendant's plane after the accident, by the plaintiff's expert witness, has been held not objectionable on the ground that the witness was allowed to make oral comments while it was being shown, where the picture could be stopped at any time and any questions could be asked by either counsel as to what the picture showed, and the record could be made as in the case of a still picture, and where every time the expert witness stated what the picture showed, he was cautioned: "No comments." Ratton v Busby, 230 Ark 667, 326 SW2d 889, 76 ALR2d 751.

§ 980 Day-in-the-life videotapes in personal injury actions

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A properly produced and presented day-in-the-life documentary may be admitted into evidence at the discretion of the trial judge to show the extent of plaintiff's injuries, and the effect that the injuries have had on the plaintiff's ability to carry on with his or her daily activities. 16

A day in the life film is only admissible if its probative value is not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. 17 The probative value in the film is great and possibility of prejudice is lowest, when the conduct portrayed in limited to ordinary, day-to-day situations. 18 A film depicting the victim in unlikely circumstances or performing improbable tasks cannot be said to fairly portray a typical day in the life of the victim. 19

While some courts require that the day-in-the-life film not be duplicative of other evidence pertaining to the nature and extent of plaintiff's injuries, 20 there is authority for the view that the mere fact that there is ample uncontradicted medical testimony concerning the nature and extent of plaintiff's injuries should not, in and of itself, prevent a plaintiff from showing to the jury a motion picture illustrating in an informative and noninflammatory manner the impact that the accident has had on his or her life. 21

Case authorities:

Trial court in personal injury action properly exercised its discretion to admit 20-minute "day-in-life" videotape of plaintiff's daily activities as paraplegic, where tape was probative of extent of injuries and impact on ordinary daily life, and tape was thus nonprejudicially relevant to issues of pain-and- suffering and quantum of damages. Jones v City of Los Angeles (1993, 2nd Dist) 20 Cal App 4th 436, 24 Cal Rptr 2d 528, 93 CDOS 8673, 93 Daily Journal DAR 14949.

In action by railroad brakeman, injured during collision between train and truck at grade crossing, trial court did not err in admitting videotapes showing plaintiff engaged in various activities requiring movement of his neck, arms, and back, and driving a car; tapes had been offered as rebuttal of plaintiff's testimony as to nature and extent of his injuries and, in view of what they depicted, tapes had some logical relevance to scope of injuries and damages. Wilson v Southern Ry. Co. (1993) 208 Ga App 598, 431 SE2d 383, 93 Fulton County D R 1703.

In damages action stemming from accident in above-ground swimming pool in which plaintiff was injured, trial court did not err in admitting videotape showing plaintiff dancing and playing pool at party about 1.5 years after accident; tape was probative as to plaintiff's mobility and extent of her injuries following accident, especially since what it depicted was inconsistent with plaintiff's trial testimony. Egelhoff v Holt (1994, Mo) 875 SW2d 543, CCH Prod Liab Rep ¶ 13869.

§ 981 Motion pictures and videotapes of crime or crime scene

View Entire Section

Videotapes of a crime scene are admissible in evidence if relevant to show motive, intent, method, malice, premeditation and the atrociousness of the crimes, even though photographs of the scene have also been admitted. 22 Accordingly, properly authenticated motion picture films and videotapes of the actual crime as it took place are generally admissible in prosecutions for robbery, larceny, and similar crimes, 23 possession and sale of stolen goods, 24 possession of firearms, 25 drug-related offenses, 26 and other crimes. 27

Case authorities:

In prosecution for first degree murder and other crimes, trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting into evidence videotape of motel crime scene recorded by police officer, which depicted motel room, including bathroom, victim's body in bathtub (with face submerged under water), and deputy coroner lifting body from bathtub, examining pillowcase over head, and cutting pillowcase to reveal face, gag in mouth and sock covering mouth. Videotape was relevant in depicting position of victim's body in tub—gagged, pillow case secured over head, and arms and legs bound behind back—supporting prosecution theory that defendant, contrary to defense presented at trial, had acted with malice and intent to kill, and that killing was deliberate and premeditated. Videotape also corroborated police officer's testimony describing crime scene. People v Sims (1993) 5 Cal 4th 405, 20 Cal Rptr 2d 537, 853 P2d 992, 93 CDOS 4925, 93 Daily Journal DAR 8252, reh den (Cal) 1993 Cal LEXIS 4798.

In prosecution for selling cocaine, trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting videotape of drug sale taken with hidden camera, notwithstanding videotape showed reverse mirror images of drug transaction, where defendant did not claim videotape did not accurately depict actual events and did not point to any portion of videotape in which reverse mirror image caused material variation from actual events tending to mislead jury. Woods v State (1993) 210 Ga App 172, 435 SE2d 464, 93 Fulton County D R 3136.

In prosecution for voluntary manslaughter, trial court did not err in admitting into evidence videotape of victim's body; even if somewhat repetitive, evidence was relevant to issues at trial. Marks v State (1993) 210 Ga App 281, 435 SE2d 703, reconsideration den (Ga App) 93 Fulton County D R 3516 and cert den (Ga) slip op.

In a prosecution for armed assault with intent to rob a bank, the court properly permitted the Commonwealth to introduce a videotape of another bank robbery, notwithstanding the contention that the videotape constituted prejudicial evidence of other bad acts, since the videotape was introduced for the limited purpose of assisting the jury in assessing the reliability of the identification of the defendant by 2 witnesses as the person depicted in the videotape. Commonwealth v Austin, 421 Mass 357, 657 NE2d 458.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the jury to view a videotape of the murder victim's apartment since (1) the videotape indicated that the apartment was not quite as blood drenched as still photographs might have led one to believe, and (2) the videotape was relevant to support the Commonwealth's contention that the crime, and the defendant's subsequent actions, were the product of deliberation rather than an emotional outburst which might have caused a bloodier scene. Commonwealth v Simmons (1995) 419 Mass 426, 646 NE2d 97.

In prosecution for first degree murder, trial court did not commit prejudicial error in admitting videotape of defendant reenacting crimes, which consisted of defendant explaining and demonstrating his actions at crime scene as they occurred with two police officers standing in as victims. Fact that officers were used to represent victims did not render videotape inadmissible where officers did not attempt any dramatization or recreation of victim's actions, but merely assumed position in garage that defendant stated victims were in before and after he shot them. Moreover, videotape was not rendered inadmissible by reason of fact that defendant appeared calm and collected in videotape and deliberation was highly contested fact issue; even if defendant's demeanor as shown on videotape was probative on issue of deliberation and was thus prejudicial to him, this alone was not basis for holding videotape inadmissible. State v Anderson (1993, Mo App) 862 SW2d 425.

Where there was a question of fact concerning the presence of blood in elevator 4 in the cellblock in which a murder occurred, a videotape of the removal of the victim's body and its placement in elevator 2 was relevant to refute defendant inmates' suggestion that the blood came from the victim's body or from those who removed the body. State v Leazer (1994) 337 NC 454, 446 SE2d 54.

The trial court did not commit plain error in the exclusion without objection of a portion of a police videotape depicting a box behind the door of a convenience store storage room where defendant and the victim's body were found, although defendant contended that this evidence rebutted the State's evidence that defendant was found hiding behind the door and thus acknowledged wrongdoing, where defendant failed to show that the exclusion of this evidence likely affected the outcome of his trial. State v Rouse (1994) 339 NC 59, 451 SE2d 543, stay den (NC) 453 SE2d 189 and reconsideration den (NC) 453 SE2d 188.

The trial court did not err by admitting a videotape illustrating testimony describing the route along which a homicide victim had been dragged behind defendant's logging truck and the location of blood along the route two days after the murder. State v House (1995) 340 NC 187, 456 SE2d 292.

In prosecution for possession of cocaine, videotape allegedly depicting drug transaction was improperly admitted where it was not properly authenticated. Kephart v State (1994, Tex Crim) 875 SW2d 319.

Trial court in capital murder prosecution did not err in admitting in evidence video apparently depicting crime scene, including victims' bodies, where defendant had made

§ 982 Authentication and verification

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Motion picture films 28 and videotapes 29 may be authenticated by testimony that the film or tape accurately depicts the events shown in it. The party who offers a videotape in evidence must show that it is accurate, faithful representation of the place, person, or subject it purports to portray. 30 This foundation may be established by any witness who is familiar with the subject matter of the videotape and is competent to testify from personal observation. 31 Thus, the testimony of a person who was present at the time a film was made that it accurately depicts what it purports to show is a legally sufficient foundation for its admission in evidence. 32 There is no requirement that the videotape be authenticated by a photographer, so long as the person authenticating the videotape is familiar with the scene depicted. 33 Whether a videotape is a fair and accurate representation of the scene sought to be depicted addresses itself to the discretion of the trial judge which will not be controlled unless abused. 34

To lay a proper foundation for the use of videotapes to preserve testimonial evidence, the proponent must show that the video and audio portions of tape were functioning properly, that the operator was trained and experienced in use of video-taping equipment, audio and visual portions of recording were authentic and accurate, no changes, additions, or deletions had been made, tape had been properly preserved, video portion was clearly visible and audio portion sufficiently understandable, and speakers were identified. 35

In proceedings to review retirement board's decision to discontinue firefighter's disability pension, trial court did not commit reversible error in admitting into evidence videotape taken by investigator that showed firefighter bending, stooping, squatting, and exerting force as he attempted to change flat tire on his truck; videotape was relevant to firefighter's physical condition and it was properly authenticated by testimony of investigator, who testified regarding his surveillance of firefighter, and by firefighter's testimony that videotape reflected his performance on that occasion. Large v Board of Managers of Birmingham Retirement & Relief Sys. (1993, Ala App) 623 So 2d 1174.

Moreover, videotape offered by prosecution was properly authenticated and admitted into evidence where witness for Commonwealth, who was driver of car attacked by protesters, viewed tape and testified it was accurate and fair depiction of events as they occurred on day of shoot. Commonwealth v Hindi (1993, Pa Super) 631 A2d 1341.

Photographs made from bank camera films are also sufficiently authenticated by foundation evidence sufficient to show the circumstances under which the film was activated and made, the chain of custody of the film, and the reliability of the process by which the photographs were made from the film. 36 While authentication by eyewitnesses is preferable, it is not required where the standard of evidence sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question is what its proponent claims is satisfied by proper foundation evidence. 37 Not every frame from a roll of film need be authenticated by accurate depiction testimony where several frames have been so authenticated by eyewitnesses and the chain of custody of the film has been established. 38

A videotape will be allowed as long as it shows a true representation of the scene at the time in question or any difference is explained. 39 In other words, the fact that a videotape is taken before or after an event does not make it inadmissible if the extent of the changes are explained so that the videotape as explained will give an understanding of the conditions that existed at the time in question. If the changes do not rob the video of probative value, the tape is admissible in evidence and any inaccuracies or unreliability can be brought out on cross-examination thus enabling the jury to give proper weight to the evidence. If, on the other hand, the changes are so substantial that the videotape lacks probative value, the video is properly excluded from evidence. 40

◆ Practice guide: The prudent course for an attorney introducing a videotape, which was not made at the time pertinent to the litigation, would be to use the authenticating witness to explain any distortions or misleading elements in the video before moving for its admission. 41

§ 985 Effect of editing

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A videotape's editing is a factor a trial court should consider when deciding whether to admit a videotape. 42 Almost always, an edited tape necessarily raises issues as to every sequence portrayed as to whether the event shown is fairly representative of fact, after the editing process, and whether it is unduly inflammatory because of the manner of presentation. 43 However, the fact that motion-picture film has been edited does not necessarily render it inadmissible, provided its accuracy is established; the editing of the film affects the weight rather than the admissibility of the evidence. 44 Whether the party offering the film in evidence should be permitted to edit it to remove irrelevant matter is within the discretion of the trial court. 45 However, since motion pictures are susceptible to fabrication, the courts, as a general rule, exercise caution in determining whether they should be allowed as evidence. 46

c. Effect of Posing; Reconstruction of Scene or Events [986, 987]

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Whether or not photographs of an attempted reproduction of the scene of a crime or accident as recalled by witnesses, showing posed persons, dummies, and movable objects, are admissible to illustrate the contention of the party offering them as to the relative positions of such persons and movable objects so represented at the time and place of the crime or accident involved in the litigation under consideration, is a matter as to which the courts are not agreed. According to many courts, a staged photograph is admissible if the court makes a preliminary determination that the photograph depicts a correct likeness of the scene it purports to represent. 47 The proper test for the admission of reconstructed photographic scenes is whether the conditions are the same or substantially similar to the events depicted. 48 Subsequent photographic evidence of reconstructed events is admissible as long as a proper foundation is laid and any discrepancies between the reconstruction and the original event are explained. 49 Once the court determines that the photograph depicts a correct likeness of the scene, it purports to represent differences between the actual scene and the photograph which go to the weight of the evidence rather than its admissibility. 50 Thus any question as to whether photographs of a crime scene have been staged goes to the weight and not the admissibility of the photograph. 51 The question of what constitutes permissible variation depends on whether it tends to confuse or mislead the jury. 52

Some courts, however, have looked with disfavor upon the admission of posed photographs based upon recollection of position of persons or objects, 53 particularly where the evidence as to their accuracy was not satisfactory. 54 And it has been held that unless rigid necessity for a posed photograph has been shown, the courts should not permit posed pictures which simply portray a scene arranged to support the testimonial contention which the profferer seeks to advance. 55

A photograph 56 portraying a reproduction of the scene of a crime, by using posed persons, dummies, or other objects, is generally admissible in evidence, where the prosecution can support their entry by proof of their relevancy, voluntariness, and accuracy, through proper verification by a witness familiar with the scene. 57 Accordingly, posed photographs have been held admissible to show: the position of persons at the scene of a homicide; 58 a police officer in the same bed in which the victim was found; 59 the places where the victims fell indicated by white spots on the photograph; 60 the scene of a homicide showing the road, truck, and certain persons; 61 the scene of a homicide showing the victim's truck and his body at the time they were found by the coroner. 62 and the scene of a larceny showing a "bird's-eye view" of the store taken from security catwalk. 63

In a few cases, the courts have prohibited, or sustained the denial of, the defendant's introduction into evidence of pictures taken at the scene of the crime which were posed for the purpose of conveying the impression to the jury that the events in question occurred in the manner portrayed, in the absence of proof as to the existence of substantially identical conditions, or authentication by an impartial witness. 64 If the purpose of the introduction of the pictures is to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice of the accused, the pictures must be authenticated by an independent source before they may be admitted into evidence. 65

The courts in some cases have sustained the introduction by the prosecution of photographs which portrayed the defendant committing the crime charged, although taken on the defendant's behalf, where the photographs served to rebut an affirmative contention of the defendant and the scene pictured did not create an unduly prejudicial effect, or where the very act of taking the photographs comprised one of the crimes charged. 66

The admissibility of posed X-rays is to be determined on a case-by-case basis. 67

§ 987 Motion pictures and videotapes

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Motion pictures and videotapes of reconstructed scenes or of posed demonstrations are admissible in evidence, provided the relevancy and accuracy of the films are adequately established 68 and any change of conditions is properly and adequately explained. 69 A videotaped reconstruction of a view of a scene prior to an accident must be performed under conditions substantially similar to the occurrence in issue. 70

When a film represents a staged reproduction of one party's version of the facts it should be examined with care because of the danger that the filmmaker's art may blur reality in the minds of the jury. 71 Where the motion pictures of reproduced or posed scenes are produced under circumstances materially different from those existing at the time in question so that relevancy is lacking, or if they are unnecessary or of no probative value, their exclusion is proper. 72 Further, a videotaped reenactment of a criminal offense may be rejected on the premise that the jurors impressions of television images of actors pose too great a danger of prejudice to be allowed. 73

§ 987 ----Motion pictures and videotapes [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: Video Technology. 58 Am Jur Trials 481.

Case authorities:

In wrongful death action arising out of intersection collision between car and train, district court did not err in introducing evidence of video animation prepared by plaintiffs' expert to demonstrate his theory of how accident occurred, i.e., that vehicle entered intersection when warning gates were up, and what would have happened if vehicle had attempted to drive around gates if they were down as defendant claimed, given cautionary instructions and opportunity for vigorous cross-examination by defendants; fact that verdict attributed some fault to driver indicated that jury did not fully accept animation scenes as recreation of accident. Robinson v Missouri Pac. R.R. (1994, CA10 Okla) 16 F3d 1083, 38 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1253.

District court in products liability action did not err in allowing jury to view videotape depicting collision between automobile and train, for limited purposes of demonstrating physical forces at play in such collision, where court specifically instructed jury not to consider videotape as reenactment of plaintiff's decedent's accident. Estate of Montag by & Through Montag v Honda Motor Co. (1996, CA10 Colo) 75 F3d 1414, CCH Prod Liab Rep ¶ 14473.

In murder prosecution, videotape made day after murder was properly admitted as reenactment of what witness saw on night of murder, even though defendant claimed scenes were inaccurate, where (1) video was offered to show jurors relative locations of victims' apartment, witness' apartment, rear stairway, and driveway of apartment building; (2) once witness confirmed that video accurately showed area where she was and where she saw assailants, court could conclude that tape was reasonable representation of physical layout of apartment building and witness' vantage point; (3) tape was not admitted to show lighting conditions, and therefore, fact that tape was made in daylight although murder occurred at night was not issue; and (4) defendant failed to demonstrate how inaccuracies could have made videotape misleading, since inaccuracies were either obvious to jurors or brought to their attention. People v Rodrigues (1994) 8 Cal 4th 1060, 36 Cal Rptr 2d 235, 885 P2d 1, 94 CDOS 9194, 94 Daily Journal DAR 17083, mod, reh den 9 Cal 4th 579a, 95 CDOS 1143, 95 Daily Journal DAR 2108 and mod, reh den (Feb 17, 1995).

In negligence and products-liability action against truck manufacturer based on accident in which truck overturned and burned, trial court did not abuse its discretion in disallowing playing of videotape depicting accident involving different type of truck; tape depicted dissimilar product (truck battery was located elsewhere) to prove different result (absence of fire after rupture of fuel tank) from similar occurrence. Further, court did allow testimony establishing same facts. Browning v Paccar, Inc. (1994) 214 Ga App 496, 448 SE2d 260, 94 Fulton County D R 2901.

In personal injury action resulting from plaintiff bus passenger's having been injured when bus door closed on plaintiff's purse while she was exiting bus, trial court erred in admitting videotape offered by defendant and showing different woman exiting bus in question several times, without incident; defendant failed to lay sufficient foundation to show that depiction on tape was substantially similar to accident. Phiropoulos v Bi-State Dev. Agency (1995, Mo App) 908 SW2d 712.

In prosecution for indecency with child, trial court erred in allowing jury to view videotapes depicting male homosexual activity, without admitting items into evidence, where they were not related to events surrounding indecency charge. Brown v State (1994, Tex App El Paso) 880 SW2d 249.

In products liability action involving allegedly defective all-terrain vehicle (ATV), trial court did not err in admitting videotape of plaintiff's ATV where tape showed vehicle without a rider and was used by plaintiff's expert in making his calculations regarding speed and angle at which ATV's flip over. Laing v American Honda Motor Co. (1993, La App 2d Cir) 628 So 2d 196, cert den (La) 1994 La LEXIS 792.

A motion picture of another person operating the machine on which the plaintiff lost three fingers was properly admitted in evidence, though taken some time after the plaintiff's accident, where there was testimony that the condition, manner of operation, and location of the machine were the same both before and after the accident as at the time the motion pictures were made. *Richardson v Missouri K. A videotape film of a reenactment of a homicide was properly admitted over defendant's objection that the room did not have the same physical environment as the scene of the shooting where the reenactment occurred in an office of a state trooper's post and the defendant had agreed to participate in the videotaped representation of his account of the shooting. Morgan v State (Ala App) 518 So 2d 186.

Videotape of demonstrations and simulated explosion of bomb was admissible as reconstructed bomb was substantially similar to the device provided by the defendant and was relevant in the prosecution for solicitation to first-degree murder as evidence of the instrumentality to be used in the murder. Loy v State, 310 Ark 33, 832 SW2d 499, motion den (Ark) 1992 Ark LEXIS 654 and post-conviction proceeding (Ark) 1993 Ark LEXIS 130.

In negligent homicide case in which car hit bicyclist, videotape offered by defense as attempted recreation of the event was properly excluded where videotape appeared to take sides, suggested that the sun blinded the defendant to approach of bicyclist, speeds of vehicles in videotape were fixed arbitrarily, defendant's left turn was not pictured as sharp enough to conform to other testimony, and certain circumstances testified to as bearing on the accident were not shown. Commonwealth v Nadworny, 30 Mass App 912, 566 NE2d 625, review den 409 Mass 1104, 569 NE2d 832.

In a prosecution for the death of another resulting from a motor vehicle collision at an intersection, the trial court did not err in refusing to permit the defendant to introduce motion pictures to demonstrate the defendant's contention that a stop sign was obscured, where still photographs clearly demonstrated the visibility of the stop sign, the defendant at no time testified that the stop sign was obscured, and the motion pictures were made so far away from the stop sign involved that it was highly speculative that they pictured the true condition existing at the time. Barry v State (Okla Crim) 369 P2d 652.

In prosecution for murder, trial court did not err in refusing defendants' request to admit in evidence film reconstructing events of crime so as to impeach testimony of police officer, where actual events took place at night with portion of available illumination coming from nearby gas station, where jury had already viewed at night areas in question, where cinematographer making film worked in daylight and at one time apparently pointed camera into sun, where cinematographer's camera-lens nighttime portrayal of scene did not necessarily duplicate power-of-magnification capabilities of binoculars used by police surveying events, and where there was dispute as to accuracy of location of vehicle used by police surveillance team and there was no evidence that cars were of same height, width, and window space. State v Tillinghast (RI) 465 A2d 191.

6. Maps, Diagrams, Drawings, and Models [988-995]

§ 988 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Maps, drawings, and diagrams illustrating the scenes of a transaction and the relative location of objects, if shown to be reasonably accurate and correct, 74 are admissible in evidence, to aid the jury in understanding the testimony of a witness. 75 The use of such items as testimony of the objects represented rests fundamentally upon the theory that they represent a method of pictorial communication of a qualified witness, which the witness may use instead of, or in addition to, some other method. 76 Evidence of this character is helpful in aiding the jury to visualize the objects and scenes in the action, 77 and the contention that such evidence is calculated to improperly influence the jury has generally been rejected. 78 Nonetheless, a distorted drawing so colorful so as to distract jury's attention should not be admitted. 79

Diagrammatic representations admittedly not of the specific object being testified about, but of such objects generically, or of one of the same species, are often employed in illustrating testimony relating to the subject of proof. 80

The practice in some states permits the use of a map, plat, or drawing in the examination of a witness, as a mere means of communicating his individual answers by illustration, without such item having been previously admitted in evidence in the technical sense. 81 If an objection is made to such use or admission, the ruling of the trial judge properly depends on the character of the representation or paper and the circumstances under which it is produced or offered. 82 According to some cases, however, the sketch or diagram must be in such form that it can be made part of the record. 83

The admission into evidence of a map, plat, diagram, or other drawing, 84 the manner and circumstances of its use, 85 and its delivery to the jury upon their retirement, 86 are largely within the discretion of the trial judge, and the trial judge's ruling will not be disturbed unless there has been an abuse of such discretion. 87 A map or diagram has been commonly allowed to illustrate a witness' testimony relating to the scene of a crime. 88

Case authorities:

Although exhibit used to calculate individual lost wages of employees laid off need not have been excluded as part of settlement between union and employer, its exclusion was harmless since employees failed to prove that union acted arbitrarily in implementing settlement and it would not have made difference in outcome since it did not distinguish between work that had been properly eliminated and work improperly transferred to other union. Nida v Plant Protection Ass'n Nat'l (1993, CA6 Ohio) 7 F3d 522, 144 BNA LRRM 2530, 126 CCH LC ¶ 10888.

In action arising out of boundary line dispute, trial court properly admitted plat prepared by surveyor, where, although it was true that plat did not meet technical requirements that would have made it presumptive evidence, plat was admitted for limited purpose of illustrating other competent testimony regarding boundary, and although property owner contended that surveyor failed to determine and use "350' contour line" to which reference was made in deeds to both parcels of property, argument was not supported by record, which showed that surveyor found and relied upon contour line and plainly marked it on plat he prepared for trial. Purcell v C. Goldstein & Sons (1994) 264 Ga 443, 448 SE2d 174, 94 Fulton County D R 3050.

In prosecution for robbery of bar, admission of handdrawn map by detective of area bounded by restaurant, bar, and driveway was not erroneous, where map was admitted for purpose of showing location of streets, driveway, bar, and restaurant, detective testified that map was not drawn to scale, but that he had measured distance at two separate times using odometers of two unmarked police cars, and trial justice gave cautionary instruction. State v Menard (1996, RI) 669 A2d 536.

Maps, drawings, and diagrams may be made by the witness while testifying, either by his or her own hand, 89 or by directions to counsel, 90 or they may be made prior to the trial, either by the witness 91 or another. 92

◆ Practice guide: The questions of the accuracy, possible bias, or lack of knowledge of a person who made a drawing, and of the effect of the drawing upon a witness as leading, are open to opposing counsel in cross-examination and argument. 93

As the touchstone for admissibility of all exhibits is proper authentication, 94 and as long as the witness is able to testify that an exhibit used for illustrative purposes is a fair and accurate representation of the scene it portrays, it is irrelevant that the witness did not prepare the exhibit. 95

§ 990 Authentication or verification

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

As a general rule, maps, plats and diagrams must be properly authenticated and shown to be accurate before they can be admitted. 96 The use or admission, to illustrate or embody testimony, of a diagrammatic representation not made in court is generally conditioned upon some evidence that it is correct. 97 As long as the witness has personal knowledge of the subject matter and the diagram is accurate, drawings drafted out of court are admissible despite a hearsay objection because the in-court authentication of the drawing is the assertion permitting cross-examination of its accuracy, and this is sufficient to satisfy a hearsay objection. 98 Maps and diagrams used merely to illustrate testimony of witnesses are not subject to as strict proof of accuracy as those offered as independent evidence. 99 Ordinarily, testimony that the exhibit is a fair and accurate portrayal of the scene at the time of the incident is sufficient to satisfy this requirement. 1 A map or plat, even though kept in a public office and in general use there for reference, cannot be admitted as evidence without verification by proof of its correctness as to the matter for which it is sought to be used. 2 But the question of proper verification—that is, testimony that the diagrammatic representation is correct before exhibition to the trier of facts, or before admission in evidence—seldom arises in connection with a representation made by a witness while testifying, since the witness' act of making the map, drawing, or diagram under oath at the request of counsel is sufficient to show that the map, drawing, or diagram is a true representation so far as the witness can make it so. 3

If a surveyor's plat is offered to show the location of a boundary line, the testimony must be that the measurements given on the plat are actually correct. 4

In general, where a map, plat, or other drawing is to be offered as embodying in itself the knowledge of the witness, to which he, in this form, deposes, the verifying witness must be shown to have such personal knowledge of the facts as to qualify him to testify to their correct representation in the drawing, and it must be stated by him explicitly to be correct, or to be a true representation of what it purports to show. 5 If accuracy is not required in the testimony which the drawing is designed to express, accuracy is not required in the drawing itself, and it may be admitted though admittedly inaccurate in every detail, provided it is reasonably accurate and correct. 6 It need not represent all the area or objects that may be material to the issue. 7 If the portrayal is of objects of a fixed and permanent nature, and the interval of time between the event in issue and the making of the map, plat, or other drawing is reasonable in relation to that fact, there is a presumption of continuity of conditions which will support the admission or use of the drawing in the absence of evidence of change. 8 When the drawing of a place is made to include also movable objects therein, it is not usually admissible without testimony that those objects were there, in the places shown by the drawing, at the time of the event. 9

The question of the sufficiency of the verification or authentication of a diagrammatic representation is addressed to the discretion of the trial judge. 10 After a map, plat, or other drawing has been used by counsel on both sides, as in the nature of a "chalk," in examining their witnesses, it is usually no error for the judge to admit it in evidence. 11

If a surveyor's map is offered by a party as direct evidence to show his title to land as bounded therein, or where the surveyor testifies that he located the boundaries from records in the assessor's office and by the fact that the party had paid taxes on the land as so bounded, it is error to admit the map, generally. Banks v Watrous, 134 Conn 592, 59 A2d 723, 4 ALR2d 286.

§ 991 Drawings and diagrams not to scale

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A drawing or diagram not drawn to scale may be admitted into evidence where the jury is informed that the drawing or diagram is not drawn to scale, 12 so long as the drawing or diagram is sufficiently explanatory or illustrative to be of potential help to the trier of fact. 13 However, if a sketch is likely to be misleading because it was not drawn to scale, it should be excluded. 14 Similarly, a map, lacking a scale, which is not relevant to the proposition for which it is offered, that is, to show that the defendant could not have traveled from the scene of the crime to the site of his arrest during the time elapsed, is properly excluded. 15

In prosecution for possession of marijuana with intent to distribute and conspiracy to distribute, trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting hand-drawn, unscaled map depicting area in which airplane in which marijuana was transported landed, vehicles used to transport marijuana were found, and in which several defendants were arrested, where map's probative value was not substantially outweighed by danger of misleading jury or confusing issues, where prejudice was minimized as exhibit was merely used to supplement oral testimony, where map was not taken by jurors to jury room, and where

§ 992 Effect of markings, legends or other extraneous matter

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Properly verified or authenticated maps, plats, diagrams, and drawings are not rendered inadmissible in evidence because of marks, memoranda, legends, or other extraneous matter thereon, where the individual who made the marks or writings, or another witness familiar with the facts, explains them or testifies as to their correctness. 16 When objectionable marks or writings are excluded, expunged, or erased, the instrument becomes properly admissible. 17 But it is clear that where the person who made the marks or notations did so not from his own personal knowledge, but from what he heard from others, or if the one who made the marks or notations is not produced as a witness, the map, diagram, or drawing containing such marks or notations is inadmissible in evidence. 18

In some instances, although the admission in evidence of diagrams, maps, containing marks, legends, or other writings is error, it does not constitute such prejudicial error as will warrant reversal of the judgment or verdict of the lower court. 19 This is particularly true where the marks, legends, or other writings are of themselves harmless

However, a chart or drawing made by the defendant by tracing over a plat prepared by an engineer was admissible for the purpose of clarifying testimony regarding the location of objects and places which otherwise would be difficult to locate and describe, and the fact that the subject matter of the notations thereon was hearsay to the witness did not render the exhibit objectionable where such notations were not directly or indirectly related to the subject matter of the action. State v Vaughan, 243 Ind 221, 184 NE2d 143.

The practice of permitting witnesses, in an action to recover for injuries sustained in an automobile collision, to mark a map drawn to scale with small circles and crosses in various colors to indicate their respective recollections as to the location of snowdrifts and of the open lane which had been cleared through the drift, and of permitting recorded testimony of this type to go to the jury, is frowned upon, but in view of the evidence produced in the instant case from both sides, such practice was not prejudicial. *Dibert v Ross Pattern & Foundry Development Co. § 993 Models and replicas, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Models or replicas of an object or instrumentality or of a site or premises involved in a matter in issue are admissible in evidence in the trial of a civil 21 or criminal 22 action, in the discretion of the trial court, whose determination in such respect is reviewable only for manifest error or an abuse of discretion. 23 It has been said, however, that courts should approach the admission of models and things offered exclusively for illustrative purposes with wariness and circumspection, to the end that fact be not confused with fancy, and artistic interpretations push aside and take over the role of the truth of the matter in question. 24 Under some circumstances, the admissibility in evidence of particular models of objects or instrumentalities, or of sites or premises, may be denied. 25

Models and objects offered in evidence for purely illustrative purposes must not only be relevant and material in character to the ultimate fact sought to be demonstrated by their use, but, additionally, must be supported by proof showing such evidence to be substantially like the real thing and substantially similar in operation and function to the object or contrivance in issue. 26 A model or replica should be excluded where the jury is apt to be misled by it or by its use. 27 However, the fact that a model differs in some respects from the original will not prevent its admission in evidence or its use for purposes of demonstration or illustration, where such dissimilarity is clearly explained to the jury, or where the difference is not such as to mislead the jury. 28

A witness' use of a model of an object or instrumentality, or of a site or premises, involved in an accident or incident, for purposes of demonstration, without such model's being placed in evidence, has been recognized in a number of cases as proper, under the circumstances considered, 29 but under some circumstances, such use of a model has been denied. 30

In wrongful death action brought against truck manufacturer, alleging that accident was caused by defective spacer block in truck's suspension, trial court did not err in refusing to allow introduction of model of manufacturer's redesigned spacer block to show that, had truck been equipped with redesigned block, the accident would not have occurred, where refusal did not affect any substantial rights because manufacturer conceded alternate design was practical and feasible, jury was informed of component's role in maintaining truck stability and was told that redesigned block could have been installed at time of accident. Foster v Ford Motor Co. (CA5 Tex) 621 F2d 715, CCH Prod Liab Rep ¶ 8740, 6 Fed Rules Evid Serv 306, 29 UCCRS 455.

§ 994 --Objects similar to one used in crime

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A model, reproduction, or replica of an unavailable object is admissible in criminal cases so long as it fairly represents the object which it is offered to demonstrate and so long as it is relevant to a material issue. 31 When the actual weapon used in a crime is unavailable, a model or replica of the weapon may be admitted into evidence as a demonstrative aid, 32 but only if the exhibit constitutes an accurate and reasonable reproduction of the object involved. 33 Accordingly, an object which is not an exact replica of the original may be admissible if: (1) the original is not available, but if it were available, the original would be admissible; (2) it is relevant and material to the issue in controversy; (3) its probative value outweighs any inflammatory effect; and (4) the jury is instructed that the object is not the object used in the commission of the crime, and is to be considered by the jury solely as evidence that demonstrates or illustrates what the object used in the offense looks like. 34 However, when the substituted object is not an exact replica and it differs from the actual object in its distinguishing characteristics, the probative value of the non-exact weapon or instrumentality will be very slight. 35

Where the victim of a crime identifies a weapon as similar to that used in the commission of a crime, the weapon is admissible for illustrative purposes whether or not it is the identical weapon. 36

§ 995 Medical or anatomical charts or models; skeleton

Medical or anatomical charts showing a human skeleton or a part of a human body have been admissible, in the discretion of the trial court, in a number of cases. 37 The test as to the admissibility of medical and anatomical charts is their capacity to inform the jury, and where they are accurate and fully explained, they are admissible even though abstract. 38

Both in criminal 39 and civil 40 cases, where the problem of the admissibility of a skeleton or model of a human body or a part thereof has been presented, the view has generally been followed that if the jury or court will be enlightened by the introduction of such evidence, it is admissible within the trial court's discretion. Such a model, if otherwise relevant and admissible, may be received in evidence even though it may be of a shocking or gruesome character. 41 However, a model may be excluded on the ground that is cumulative of expert testimony. 42

Mannequins or models of the human body may be used as illustrative evidence to assist the jury in understanding the testimony of witnesses or to clarify the circumstances of a crime, 43 and any discrepancy between the size of the mannequin or model and that of the victim can be pointed out to the jury. 44 In this regard, a trial court may properly allow a child witness to use an anatomically correct doll when describing and demonstrating how sexual abuse occurred, 45 since such a testimonial aid would likely assist the jury in understanding the witness' testimony. 46

7. Experiments, Tests, Demonstrations and Polls [996-1022]

a. In General [996-1001]

§ 996 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Experiments, demonstrations, and tests often serve to put the jury in the possession of knowledge, important to their determination of the issues, which they could not readily or accurately obtain from the testimony of the witnesses, and which, often, may afford evidence more satisfactory or reliable than oral testimony. 47 The courts, while not favoring the making of tests and experiments by the jury itself, 48 now very generally permit relevant experiments, demonstrations, or tests by others to be performed in court in the presence of the jury, 49 or permit evidence to be given of experiments, demonstrations, or tests performed out of court, 50 when they are made under similar conditions and like circumstances to those existing in the case at issue, 51 for the purpose of aiding the trier of facts, in either a criminal 52 or civil 53 case, in determining the issues of fact. Additionally, under proper circumstances, the results of a survey or poll of public or consumers' opinion, recognition, preference, or the like, is admissible. 54

Experimental evidence is subject to exclusion at the trial court's discretion if its prejudicial effect outweighs its probative value. 55 The evidence of the experiment must not consume undue time, confuse the issues, or mislead the jury, and such a test is merely a circumstance to be considered in connection with other evidence in the case. 56 Thus, the ultimate test for the admissibility of an experiment as evidence is whether it tends to enlighten the jury and enable the jurors to more intelligently consider the issues presented. 57 It has been held that evidence of the results of experiments is to be used only for the purpose of evidencing the tendency, capacity, or quality of a certain state of facts to produce a certain result, 58 and that it cannot be used for the purpose of showing that by the doing of certain acts, a result was accomplished. 59 The results of an experiment or test are not admissible where the experiment or test is inconclusive or raises a number of collateral issues. 60

The usual experiment consists of the arranging of conditions approximating those attendant upon the fact in issue and observing data emanating from such arranged conditions, the sole purpose of such an experiment being to obtain information for use in a particular lawsuit. 61 However, with respect to experiments or tests which have no relation to any lawsuit and which are made for the sole purpose of obtaining scientific knowledge, since this type of evidence is free from the taint of interest or bias that might accompany the usual experiment evidence, greater latitude should be shown in admitting such evidence. 62

The performance of experiments, demonstrations, or tests rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, and this discretion will not be interfered with on appeal unless it is apparent that it has been abused. 63 As a concomitant of this principle, the question of the similarity of conditions prevailing at the time of the experiment or test to those which prevailed at the time of the occurrence in question is one that lies within the sound discretion of the trial court, to be decided in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances. 64 Although tests and demonstrations in the courtroom are not lightly to be rejected when they would play a positive and helpful role in the ascertainment of truth, courts must be alert to the danger that, when ill-designed or not properly relevant to the point at issue, they will divert or otherwise prejudice the purposes of the trial; when there is such a threat, the trial court itself must decide, in the exercise of a sound discretion based on the nature of the proffered proof and the context in which it is offered, whether the value of the evidence outweighs its potential for prejudice. 65 Accordingly, permission to perform or to give evidence of the results of such an experiment or test cannot be demanded as a matter of right. 66

§ 997 In presence of jury

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

At the discretion of the trial judge, 67 the courts generally permit a party to make or perform an experiment, demonstration, or test in open court before the jury when it will prove, tend to prove, or throw light upon, the issues in the case on trial, 68 provided such experiments or tests are made under similar conditions and like circumstances to those existing in the case at issue. 69 Thus, jurors may be shown the method of taking and identifying fingerprints; 70 the similarities between genuine and disputed writings; 71 or the jurors may be allowed to examine under a microscope the markings on bullets, in order to identify the gun from which the bullets were fired. 72

Tests and experiments in the courtroom may be used in order to demonstrate the trustworthiness and competency of an expert. 73

§ 998 Out of presence of jury

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Evidence may be given of experiments, demonstrations, and tests made out of court and not in the presence of the jury upon the same principles which permit them to be conducted in the jury's presence. 74 It is a matter peculiarly within the discretion of the court to decide the admissibility of such evidence in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances. 75 The test for exclusion is whether the experiment would confuse rather than aid the jury. 76

If the conduct of an experiment or a demonstration designed to show how an accident happened is fraught with peril to those in the vicinity, the trial court's discretion should be exercised in favor of an experiment performed outside the presence of the jury because there can be no justification for unnecessarily subjecting persons in the courtroom to any real danger of physical harm, and, if the judge requires or suggests the use of safety equipment in the conduct of the demonstration, and the parties, or one of them, at the time of the accident were not using safety equipment, the jury is almost certain to infer that one or more parties was negligent in failing to use the equipment or in failing to furnish it to others. 77

Films or videotapes of experiments by accident reconstructionists, physicists, engineers, or other witnesses qualified as experts on the cause of accidents, offered merely to illustrate the principles used in forming an opinion, do not require adherence to the facts and are admissible in evidence, provided such films or tapes are not misleading in and of themselves, and provided it is made clear that they are offered only as illustrations of the principle involved. 78 However, it is essential that the jury be carefully instructed as to the extent to which they can use and consider the films or videotapes. 79

The criteria for establishing the admissibility of crash test films are: (1) that the data be relevant, (2) that the tests be conducted under conditions substantially similar to those of the actual occurrence, and (3) that their presentation not consume undue amounts of time, not confuse the issues, and not mislead the jury. 80

§ 999 Absence of accused during experiment or test

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The absence of the accused during the making of an experiment or test does not render inadmissible testimony concerning such experiment or test, 81 and some of the cases hold that such absence of the accused goes to the weight, rather than the admissibility, of such evidence. 82 Thus, evidence, otherwise admissible, of experiments involving firearms is usually not excluded because of the absence of the accused during the performance of such experiments. 83 So too, the presence of the defendant, or notice to him, is not required at postmortem examinations, and his absence therefrom will not make inadmissible testimony concerning such examination. 84

§ 1000 Necessity that expert conduct experiment

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A recurring contention has been that evidence of an experiment is not admissible unless it was conducted by an expert. No general rule can be stated in this connection, other than, perhaps, the descriptive comment that the degree of expertness required depends on the nature of the experiment and all the circumstances. 85 An expert is not required where the testimony does not constitute an expert opinion, but merely a statement of the observation of certain effects, 86 nor is an expert required to conduct a simple experiment or test, 87 such as an experiment or test with regard to visibility or a line of vision, 88 or the existence of a paper that will dissolve when placed in water. 89 However, it is improper to admit into evidence the results of a morphine analyzer where the witness is not an expert with regard to the analyzer. 90

§ 1001 Reliability of scientific technique used by expert witness

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Under the Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence, if the witness qualifies as an expert, the proponent must show that the scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge to which the expert is privy will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact which is in issue. 91 In determining whether the scientific knowledge will assist the trier of fact so as to be admissible under the Federal Rules of Evidence, the following factors should be considered: (1) whether the theory or technique can and has been tested; (2) whether the theory or technique has been subjected to peer review and publication; (3) the known or potential rate of error of a particular scientific technique; and (4) whether the technique is generally accepted in the relevant scientific community. 92 The assessment of reliability of a technique permits, but does not require, explicit identification of a relevant scientific community and an express determination of a particular degree of acceptance of the theory or technique within that community. Widespread acceptance can be an important factor in ruling particular evidence admissible. A known technique that has been able to attract only minimal support within the scientific community may properly be viewed with skepticism. 93 This inquiry is a flexible one and the focus must be solely on principles and methodology, not on the conclusions that such principles and methodology generate. 94

§ 1001 ----Reliability of scientific technique used by expert witness [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

"General acceptance" or Frye test for admissibility of expert testimony is not incorporated into Fed Evid Rule 702. Under rule, trial judge must determine whether expert proposes to testify to scientific knowledge that will assist the trier of fact to understand or determine a fact in issue. This requires preliminary assessment of whether reasoning or methodology underlying proposed testimony is scientifically valid and of whether that reasoning or methodology properly can be applied to facts in issue. Daubert v Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc. (1993, US) 125 L Ed 2d 469, 113 S Ct 2786, 93 CDOS 4825, 93 Daily Journal DAR 8148, 27 USPQ2d 1200, CCH Prod Liab Rep ¶ 13494, 37 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1, 23 ELR 20979, 7 FLW Fed S 632.

b. Authentication or Verification [1002-1004]

View Entire Section

Before one may be permitted to make an experiment or test in court or to introduce evidence of an experiment or test made out of court, preliminary proof must be given showing that the results of the experiment or test can be relied on as a substantive fact. 95 This means that it must be shown that the person who made, or is to make, the experiment or test is competent to do so, that the apparatus was or is of the kind, and in the condition, suitable for the experiment or test, and that the experiment or test was or will be honestly and fairly made, 96 under conditions and circumstances similar to those prevailing at the time of the occurrence involved in the controversy. 97

The proponent of experimental evidence bears the burden of production and proof on the question whether such evidence rests on an adequate foundation. 98

§ 1003 Similarity of conditions

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

One desiring to make an experiment or test in court or to introduce evidence of an experiment or test made out of court should first show that the experiment or test is to be made or was made, as the case may be, under conditions and circumstances similar to those prevailing at the time of the occurrence involved in the controversy; 99 otherwise, the courts will not, as a general rule, permit the making of the experiments or tests or the introduction of evidence. 1 This is so because of the danger of misleading the members of the jury, who may attach exaggerated significance to the tests results. 2 It is clear, however, that the conditions need not be identical with those existing at the time of the occurrence, but it is sufficient if there is a substantial similarity of conditions. 3 Demonstrations of experiments used to merely illustrate the principles forming an expert opinion do not require strict adherence to the facts. 4 Minor variations in the essential conditions go to the weight, rather than to the admissibility, of the evidence. 5

There is no precise test or gauge to determine when the requirement of substantial similarity has been satisfied. This depends largely upon the purpose for which such evidence is to be introduced. 6 However, there are several principles that may be used to guide the court in determining substantial similarity, including: whether the similarities are likely to distort the results of the experiment to the degree that the evidence is now relevant; whether the similarities can be adjusted for or explains that their effect on the results can be understood by the jury; the purpose of the experiment and the degree to which the matter under experiment is a subject of precise science; and whether the experiment would be considered valid by a person skilled or knowledgeable in the field which the experiment concerns. 7 Speaking generally, however, the measure of permissible variation of the conditions of the experiment or test from those of the occurrence is measured by considering whether such variation is liable to confuse or mislead the jury. 8 When the conditions are so dissimilar from those of the occurrence in question as to tend to confuse or mislead the jury, the evidence of an experiment or test should be rejected. 9

In prosecution for possession of marijuana, trial court's refusal to permit defense attorney to conduct in court experiment to test arresting officer's ability to differentiate odor of marijuana by permitting counsel to submit five plastic baggies, one containing marijuana and the other four containing other substances, to such officer did not constitute abuse of discretion, nor violate accused's Sixth Amendment rights, since conditions of proposed experiment differed substantially from those which existed at time of principal event. United States v Vallejo (CA5 Tex) 541 F2d 1164.

§ 1004 --Court's discretion; proof

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In general, results of an experiment or test are admissible only upon a showing that the experiment or test is to be made or was made under conditions and circumstances similar to those prevailing at the time of the occurrence involved in the controversy. 10 The question of similarity of conditions is one that lies within the sound discretion of the trial court, to be decided in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances. 11 But this discretion of the trial court concerns the determination of the sufficiency of the proof of similarity, rather than any discretion of the court to refuse to hear any preliminary proof as to similarity. In other words, the court cannot, on the ground of dissimilarity of conditions, reject experimental or demonstrative evidence, otherwise relevant to the issues, without giving the offeror an opportunity to show the similarity of conditions. 12 A party has a right to present evidence of the similarity of conditions attending the experiment or test with those attending at the time and place of the occurrence in question, as the basis of presenting evidence as to the results of such an experiment or test. 13

Generally, the burden is on the party offering the evidence to show sufficient similarity of conditions, 14 and this is especially so where the evidence is strongly favorable to the party offering it. 15 A greater amount of latitude is permitted where the evidence is offered in rebuttal of evidence of experiments given on behalf of the other party than where it is sought to demonstrate the truth or falsehood of a substantive matter in issue. 16

c. Subject Matter of Experiments, Demonstrations, and Tests [1005-1022]

(1). In General [1005, 1006]

§ 1005 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The scope of the subject matter of experiments or tests which may be used as evidence is very wide. 17 The use of such evidence generally rests within the sound discretion of the trial judge. 18 The only definite limitation regarding the subject matter of an experiment or test is that evidence of this character must be received only where the experiment is of such a nature as to aid the jury in its deliberations; if it would tend to mislead or confuse them, it should not be received. 19 Experiments or tests as to matters within the range of ordinary knowledge or experience will, as a rule, be permitted. 20

Under proper circumstances, a demonstration or experiment to show the operation of a mechanical device or appliance is admissible. 21 Experiments or tests with the human body tending to show the nature and extent of injuries are also generally admissible. 22 In criminal cases, evidence is admissible to show: the results of an experiment to determine the illumination provided by automobile headlights; 23 the presence of copper in the victim's body to show how electrocution occurred; 24 the time required to travel from one point to another; 25 the course taken by logs thrown into a river in which the victim's body was found; 26 the possibility of fitting a human body in the luggage compartment of an automobile; 27 the possibility of opening a lock by using a piece of celluloid; 28 the distance within which an automobile without brakes would stop; 29 and what could be observed or heard from a certain vantage point. 30

§ 1005 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court did not abuse its discretion by failing to suppress expert testimony comparing body fluids and hairs contained in a rape kit with those of the defendant as a sanction under GS § 15A-910 for the State's destruction of the rape kit, thereby preventing defendant from invoking his right to inspect and test the evidence, where the State informed defendant that he could have access to or copies of any tests performed as well access to any physical evidence, but defendant made no attempt to test the evidence during the many months before trial during which the evidence was still in the State's possession. State v Graham (1995) 118 NC App 231, 454 SE2d 878, review den 340 NC 262, 456 SE2d 834.

In an appeal from a termination of parental rights where the father allegedly sexually abused his daughter, the Court of Appeals held that the mother did not establish the reliability of the penile plethysmograph, where there was no medical testimony presented on the issue of reliability, the 2 experts who analyzed the results gave conflicting interpretations, and one expert admitted that a knowledgeable person could manipulate the results of the test. In Interest of A.V. (1993, Tex App Fort Worth) 849 SW2d 393, writ den (Jun 30, 1993).

The discretion of a trial court in admitting evidence of experiments performed out of the presence of the jury is not abused in a prosecution for murder by the admission of testimony of experiments to show the reasonable driving time between the place of the crime and the place where the body was found, and that the decedent's body could have been transported in the trunk of the defendant's car, where dissimilarities in the conditions and circumstances of the experiments, and those pertaining to the issues involved, are neither material nor misleading. State v De Zeler, 230 Minn 39, 41 NW2d 313, 15 ALR2d 1137.

§ 1006 Effect of consumption of evidence as result of testing

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Generally, with respect to hard physical evidence, such as blood, 31 drugs, 32 urine, 33 and gun powder, 34 the necessary consumption or destruction of the evidence in state crime laboratories does not violate the accused's rights, even though the accused is thus prevented from subjecting any of the hard physical evidence to tests by his own expert. 35 However, in some cases, the courts have indicated that before subjecting a substance to a test that is likely to consume the entire substance, the prosecution has a duty to notify the accused so that the accused may have his own expert present at the test. 36

The Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause did not require law enforcement agencies to preserve breath samples in order to introduce breath analysis tests at trial, 37 and unless a criminal defendant can show bad faith on the part of the police, failure to preserve potentially useful evidence does not constitute a denial of due process. 38

(2). Tests to Determine Truth [1007-1011]

§ 1007 Polygraph examinations

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The polygraph test operates on the principle that stress causes physiological changes in the body which can be measured to indicate whether the subject of the examination is telling the truth. During an examination in which a polygraph is used, sensors are attached to the subject so that the polygraph can mechanically record the subject's physiological responses to a series of questions. 39 The courts almost uniformly reject the results of polygraph tests when offered in evidence for the purpose of establishing the guilt or innocence of one accused of a crime, whether the accused or the prosecution seeks its introduction, for the reason that the polygraph has not as yet attained scientific acceptance as a reliable and accurate means of ascertaining truth or deception. 40

◆ Reminder: General acceptance in the field in which scientific evidence belongs is not a necessary precondition to the admissibility of scientific evidence under the Federal Rules of Evidence. 41 Nonetheless, some courts have permitted evidence of polygraph evidence under special circumstances. 42 Furthermore, some courts reject the per se rule of exclusion of polygraph tests in criminal cases and leave the admissibility of lie-detector results to the discretion of the trial judge. 43

Practice Aids: Misconceptions and reevaluation–Polygraph admissibility after Rock and Daubert, 1996 U Ill LR 2:363 (1996).

Case authorities:

A polygraph examination of a witness is inadmissible at trial, since such evidence is no more reliable than a polygraph examination of a defendant. People v Gard (1994) 158 Ill 2d 191, 198 Ill Dec 415, 632 NE2d 1026.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's motion for a mistrial in an prosecution resulting from defendant's attempt to hire someone to kill her former husband and a woman he was seeing where the person who was hired, testifying for the State, offered to take a polygraph test. The offer was unintentionally elicited by defendant after intense cross-examination and during a trial revealing inconsistencies in the witness's testimony, the trial court allowed the defendant's motion to strike the statement and immediately instructed the jury to disregard the statement, and the court further asked the jury if they could in fact disregard the statement, to which they answered in the affirmative. State v Suggs (1995) 117 NC App 654, 453 SE2d 211.

§ 1008 --Tests taken upon stipulation as to admissibility of results

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

When the parties to an action have stipulated as to the admissibility of polygraph tests results, the courts are not in agreement as to whether the results of the polygraph tests taken upon stipulation are admissible. One line of authority seems to support the view that the results of a lie detector test taken upon a stipulation that the results will be admissible are not admissible. 44 Other courts, however, follow the view that the results of lie detector tests are admissible when the test is taken pursuant to a stipulation that the results will be admissible on the theory that since the accused would undoubtedly rely on the results if positive, it would be unreasonable to allow the accused to defeat the introduction of lie detector tests results because the results are unfavorable. 45 While there is some authority to the effect that lie detector tests are not admissible in attorney disciplinary proceedings, 46 some courts have taken the view that the results of lie detector tests are admissible, upon stipulation between the parties, in proceedings to discipline attorneys. 47 One court reasoned that a stipulation was required to compensate for the fact that polygraph evidence lacked scientific acceptance. 48

Many courts allow the results of lie detector tests taken upon a stipulation to be admitted in evidence in criminal cases only if certain conditions are met. 49 These conditions may include that the accused, his counsel, and the prosecutor all sign a stipulation providing for the defendant's submission to the test and for the subsequent admission at trial of the graph and the expert's opinion, 50 and that the stipulation of admissibility of the tests results remain subject to the discretion of the trial judge, so that if the trial judge is not convinced that the examiner is qualified or that the test was conducted under proper conditions, the trial judge may refuse to accept such evidence. 51 Further, the court may require that if the evidence is admitted, the trial judge should instruct the jury that the examiner's testimony does not tend to prove or disprove any element of the crime, but, at most, tends only to indicate that at the time of the examination the defendant was not telling the truth. 52 Lastly, the court may require that if the graphs of the examiner's opinion are offered into evidence, the opposing party must have the right to cross-examine the examiner with respect to his qualifications and training, the conditions under which the test was administered, and the limitations and the possibility of error in the technique for polygraph examination. 53

Although results of a polygraph test may be admitted on stipulation of the parties, subject to certain conditions which relate to the accused's knowledge of his rights and the trial court's discretion relating to conduct of test, there is no requirement that the prosecutor consent to the defendant's offer to stipulate to admission of results of his polygraph examination. 54

§ 1008 --Tests taken upon stipulation as to admissibility of results [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's motion for a mistrial in an prosecution resulting from defendant's attempt to hire someone to kill her former husband and a woman he was seeing where the person who was hired, testifying for the State, offered to take a polygraph test. The offer was unintentionally elicited by defendant after intense cross-examination and during a trial revealing inconsistencies in the witness's testimony, the trial court allowed the defendant's motion to strike the statement and immediately instructed the jury to disregard the statement, and the court further asked the jury if they could in fact disregard the statement, to which they answered in the affirmative. State v Suggs (1995) 117 NC App 654, 453 SE2d 211.

§ 1009 --Admissibility in particular types of cases or proceedings

The courts almost uniformly reject the results of lie detector tests when offered in evidence in actions for malicious prosecution to assess the knowledge available to the defendant at the time the criminal prosecution was begun. 55 However, there is authority for the view that the results of polygraph examinations are admissible in malicious prosecution actions where they are introduced to either show probable cause or the information available to the defendant when the decision was made to initiate a criminal prosecution. 56

Many courts also refuse to admit the results of an insured's polygraph test as substantive evidence to show the guilt or innocence of the insured regarding an alleged false insurance claim in a civil suit for recovery of insurance proceeds, 57 or to establish an insurer's good-faith basis for denial of a claim, since such evidence is considered too unreliable to afford a basis for an insurer's refusal of coverage. 58 However, there is authority for the view that evidence that an insured had failed a polygraph test is admissible in an insurer's good-faith defense for refusing to pay an insurance claim since such evidence is probative on the issue of whether the insurer had a reasonable basis for denying coverage. 59

A polygraph examination has been held admissible for use in a child custody case. 60

Some courts refuse to admit lie detector tests results in attorney discipline proceedings because lie detector evidence lacks scientific reliability or objective trustworthiness. 61

Some courts will admit the results of lie detector tests that are taken pursuant to a stipulation by the parties that the results will be admissible. 62

The voice stress evaluation test, like the polygraph test, 67 is based on the theory that an individual will undergo certain physiological changes when he or she is not telling the truth, and that these changes can be monitored and interpreted by using a voice stress evaluator machine. 68 Tests results from a voice stress evaluation are generally inadmissible in criminal 69 and civil 70 proceedings, due to the test's unreliability. However, there is authority for the view that tests results from a psychological stress test evaluation may be admissible in a civil proceeding, at the discretion of the trial judge, upon a proper showing that the operator of the test was an expert, that the testing procedure is reliable, and that the actual test administered on the individual was valid. 71

§ 1014 Re-enactment of crime

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Some courts support a view permitting the introduction of evidence, in the form of testimony of a qualified witness, of a pretrial demonstration of a crime by an accused, where the prosecution can support its offering by showing that participation on the part of the accused was voluntary and that the testimony is relevant and material to the matter in issue. 86 A number of courts also support the propriety of a demonstration by the defendant during the trial and in the presence of the jury, re-enacting the events surrounding the commission of a crime, either where the defendant voluntarily performs on request, or waives the objection of his constitutional privilege against self-incrimination by offering affirmative evidence on direct examination, rendering proper the prosecution's request, upon cross-examination, for a demonstration in rebuttal. 87 Further, the prosecution may be allowed to conduct a demonstration in the presence of the jury which recreates the scene of a homicide by arranging articles in substantially the same position as they were at the time of the homicide, if the demonstration allows the jury to more intelligently consider the prosecution's theory of the case or to rebut the defendant's theory of the case, and if the probative value of such demonstration is not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. 88

Forcing of robbery suspect to re-enact crime for benefit of victim and later presenting witness testimony as to event did not violate accused's Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination, where a few hours before re-enactment, defendant had been identified in lineup and where upon request of accused's counsel at trial, jury was instructed not to consider testimony relating to re-enactment for any purpose. Avery v Procunier (CA5 Tex) 750 F2d 444.

In prosecution for burglary, trial court did not abuse discretion in requiring defendant to demonstrate wearing of gun and holster while on witness stand where defendant was charged with burglary while armed with deadly weapon, where defendant testified that he wore gun for purpose of self-defense on night of his arrest, and where prosecutor forwarded proposition that large size of gun and placement of holster made gun awkward weapon for self-defense; although forced demonstration by defendant may have had some tendency to prejudice jury, relevancy of demonstration outweighed possible undesirable effect. Maxwell v State (Ind App) 408 NE2d 158.

In trial for second-degree murder based on allegation that defendant shook his infant in a manner sufficient to have caused bilateral subdural hemorrhage, which eventually resulted in infant's death, it was not error to permit police officer, to whom defendant made statement, to demonstrate to jury manner in which defendant had shown him he shook the infant since police officer was merely testifying to what defendant had told and shown him concerning manner in which he shook his infant. State v Lane, 39 NC App 33, 249 SE2d 449.

In prosecution for neglect of child, trial court did not abuse its discretion by forcing the defendant, accused of deliberately submerging his infant in scalding water, to demonstrate his version of the incident, where defendant claimed that he accidentally spilled scalding water onto his daughter, and defendant's difficulty recreating the incident merely went to his credibility as a witness. Sipress v State (Ind App) 562 NE2d 758.

§ 1015 Public surveys or polls

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

While the taking of surveys or polls of public or consumers' opinion, preference, or the like, is a comparatively modern technique, relatively early on the courts expressed a need for something in the nature of a competent survey or poll of public opinion, notwithstanding recognition of the possibility of using members of the public as witnesses in court. 89 A number of decisions have found the results of a survey or opinion poll inadmissible because of defects in the methods or conduct of the survey, including bias in the questions asked or the way in which they were asked. 90 On the other hand, the admissibility of the results of a survey or poll of public or consumers' opinion, recognition, preference, or the like, has been recognized or upheld in a number of cases. 91 on the ground of sheer necessity for admission, 92 or on the ground that the witness, in testifying to the results of a poll or survey, is merely indicating the state of mind of the interviewees, thus eliminating the necessity that they be cross-examined, 93

In evaluating consumer perception or opinion surveys, especially when they are conducted by reputable professionals, it is generally thought that any technical deficiencies ought to go to the weight accorded them and not to their admissibility into evidence. 94 Thus, alleged technical deficiencies in conduct of survey, such as poor sampling, inexperienced interviewers, poorly designed questions, and other errors in execution, affect a survey's weight but not its admissibility. 95

§ 1016 Tests regarding firearms; ballistic tests

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Evidence of ballistics tests are admissible at the discretion of the trial court, 96 whether such tests are made before or after commencement of the trial, 97 provided that a proper foundation as to the competency of the person administering the tests and the methods used is laid. 98 Accordingly, the following experiments and tests have been deemed admissible at the discretion of the trial judge: experiments concerned with the manner or ease of firing a gun, 99 tests by gun experts to determine whether a particular gun could be discharged accidentally, 1 tests to reveal gunshot residue, 2 tests to determine the distance from which a gun was fired, 3 results of trace metal detection techniques to show that the accused handled the gun at issue, 4 and results of neutron activation analysis test to show that the accused had fired the gun at issue. 5 The conditions surrounding tests with a gun to determine the manner in which it could be discharged need not be identical with those existing at the time of the occurrence in question; there need only be a substantial similarity. 6 However, the results of a paraffin test to determine whether the accused had recently fired a gun, as well as evidence of the accused's refusal to take such a test, have been deemed inadmissible on the ground that a paraffin test is not reliable. 7

Evidence, otherwise admissible, of experiments involving firearms is usually not excluded because of the absence of the accused during the performance of such experiments. 8

§ 1017 --Tests to determine distance from which gun fired

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The results of a test to determine the distance from which a weapon had been fired may be shown if the test was conducted under conditions substantially similar to those involved in the commission of the crime. 9 Ordinarily, this type of test is conducted by a ballistics expert, or by a law enforcement officer or other person experienced in the use and handling of guns. 10

The extent to which the conditions differ may be considered by the jury in determining the weight of such evidence. 11 However, if the conditions are materially different, the results of the test will be excluded. 12 Whether the test conditions were sufficiently similar is a question to be resolved by the trial judge, in his discretion, and his ruling will not be disturbed unless there has been an abuse of such discretion. 13

§ 1018 Voice recognition

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Testimony of identification of a person by having heard his voice has been regarded as legitimate and competent to establish identity in both civil and criminal cases, 14 and in attempting to devalue voice recognition testimony in the minds of the jurors, defense attorneys have sought to introduce evidence, tests, and demonstrations of its liability to error. 15 Voice analysis evidence by means of a sound spectrograph or "voiceprint"—an electromagnetic instrument which analyzes sound and disperses it into an array of its time, frequency, and intensity components—is not so inherently unreliable or misleading as to require its exclusion from a jury's consideration in every case, and where the record demonstrates that virtually all safeguards designed to assure reliability and to prevent misleading of the jury are employed, spectrographic voice analysis evidence is admissible. 16 However, there is authority for the view that voice spectrography results are not admissible in criminal prosecutions because the technique is not generally accepted in the scientific community. 17

◆ Observation: In light of the conflict among judicial and legal authorities as to the reliability of voice spectrographic evidence, it is improper to admit voice spectrographic evidence without a preliminary inquiry into reliability. 18

§ 1019 Hypnosis

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The courts are not in agreement as to the admissibility of hypnotically induced evidence. Some courts have expressed the view that a witness in a civil case who has undergone hypnosis may properly testify as to those events or facts recalled by him prior to or after such hypnosis. 19 However, there is also authority for the view that a witness in a civil case who has undergone hypnosis cannot testify to hypnotically induced recall, and can only testify, if the proper foundation is established, as to those facts or events recalled prior to the hypnosis. 20

As a general rule, in criminal cases, testimony concerning matters consciously recalled for the first time through pretrial hypnosis are inadmissible per se when offered in evidence for the purpose of establishing the guilt or innocence of the accused because hypnotism has not been scientifically accepted as a reliable means of producing historically accurate memory, and the admission of such testimony may violate the defendant's constitutional right to confront the witnesses against him. 21 In addition, hypnotically-induced testimony is not ordinarily admissible in criminal cases because of the concern that hypnotized subjects are unusually susceptible to suggestion. 22 However, a per se rule of inadmissibility covering hypnotically refreshed testimony by witnesses generally, may not be applied so as to exclude such testimony by criminal defendants in all cases, without regard to the particular circumstances. 23 This is so because a per se rule of excluding from evidence an accused's hypnotically refreshed recollection testimony violates the accused's constitutional rights to testify on his own behalf, to have compulsory process and conduct his own defense, and to due process of law. 24

Some courts have rejected the per se rule of inadmissibility of hypnotically refreshed testimony and have recognized that testimony concerning recollections refreshed or enhanced through pretrial hypnosis is generally admissible in a criminal proceeding, with the fact of such hypnosis going only to the testimony's weight and credibility, not to its admissibility or to the witnesses competence. 25 Other courts, however, have adopted the view that the admissibility of hypnotically refreshed testimony depends on the circumstances of each case, in light of such factors as the hypnotist's qualifications, the appropriateness of using hypnosis in the particular case, the presence or absence of undue suggestion, compliance or noncompliance with procedures calculated to insure the reliability of hypnotic recall, the extent such recall is corroborated by independent evidence, the witness' attitude, motivations, and amenability to cross-examination, and the testimony's probative value as compared to its potentially prejudicial effect. 26 Nonetheless, even courts recognizing the admissibility of hypnotically refreshed testimony where procedural safeguards are followed have ruled that testimony involving an uncorroborated personal identification of the defendant, whom the witness was not able to identify until undergoing pretrial hypnosis, is inadmissible per se in criminal proceedings where the witness had reason to know when hypnotized that the defendant was already under suspicion. 27

In a number of cases it has been held, by way of analogy to the admissibility of X-ray photographs when proper proof of their correctness and accuracy is produced, 28 that reports and graphs of thermographic studies utilizing infrared photography to diagnose nerve and muscle injuries, 29 electroencephalographic, 30 electrocardiogramic, 31 and other electronic medical tests 32 are admissible in evidence within the discretion of the trial court. The accuracy of the instruments making the test, as well as the competency of the technician performing it, must be shown before such evidence may be admitted. 33 The identification of a graph as being that of the individual examined may be established by the custodian of the record, who need not have been personally present when the test was made. 34

In plaintiff's action to recover damages for personal injuries suffered in an automobile accident, the trial court erred in precluding plaintiff's chiropractic physician from testifying regarding liquid crystal thermography, as used by qualified health-care professionals to reveal the presence of soft tissue injuries, since it is a sufficiently reliable and acceptable scientific-medical diagnostic procedure to justify admissibility of testimony and evidence relating to a particular thermography study, under appropriate circumstances, to aid the jury in its deliberations. Fay v Mincey (Fla App D2) 454 So 2d 587.

Trial court abused its discretion in admitting thermographic evidence where the foundation for the admission of the evidence had not been established because the testimony of plaintiff's three experts to establish the general scientific acceptance of thermography was not disinterested. Kluck v Borland, 162 Mich App 695, 413 NW2d 90.

§ 1021 Tests of alcoholic content of blood

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The ratio of alcohol to blood in an accused's body is a measure of his intoxication. This ratio may be determined by a chemical test of the accused's blood, ³⁵ urine, ³⁶ or breath. ³⁷ Accordingly, the results of an alcohol breath test, such as the test using the "Harger drunkometer," ³⁸ the "Intoxilyzer 5,000," ³⁹ or the "breathalyzer," ⁴⁰ are admissible in evidence. ⁴¹ It has been held that the "drunkometer" is sufficiently established as scientifically reliable and accurate for determining the alcoholic content of blood to admit testimony of the reading obtained upon a properly conducted test, without antecedent expert testimony that the reading is a trustworthy index of alcohol in the blood, or as to why it is. ⁴² However, there is some authority holding inadmissible testimony concerning the "Harger drunkometer," it being held that there is no general acceptance by the medical profession, or general scientific recognition, of the results of a drunkometer test as accurately establishing the alcoholic content of blood. ⁴³ Methods of making blood alcohol tests are often prescribed by statute. ⁴⁴

Case authorities:

In prosecution for reckless murder by operating vehicle at high rate of speed and under influence of alcohol, trial court erred in admitting results of blood alcohol test where, following his arrest, defendant had objected to taking of test; state law enforcement agency had no authority to take blood sample after refusal by arrested party. Thrower v State (1988, Ala App) 539 So 2d 1127.

In DUI prosecution, trial court properly suppressed results of blood alcohol test where implied consent advisory had been read to defendant, after which defendant had refused to consent to test; after proper arrest for DUI, test can be taken with or without driver's consent, but once decision was made to use implied consent law (under which refusal to submit to test could lead to license suspension), police could not force driver to submit to testing. State v Scott (1991, Minn App) 473 NW2d 375.

Exclusionary rule did not preclude administrative agency from considering evidence of driver's alcohol consumption obtained at sobriety checkpoint subsequently found to have been unconstitutional; applying rule to exclude evidence that driver, having violated condition of his licensure by consuming alcohol, was inimical to public safety would not deter future unlawful police conduct to any significant degree. Ascher v Commissioner of Pub. Safety (1995, Minn App) 527 NW2d 122.

In DUI prosecution, trial court properly suppressed results of blood alcohol test where defendant had refused to consent to giving blood sample and no exigent circumstances existed to justify drawing sample without a warrant; defendant arrived at hospital at 9:15 p.m., and blood sample was not taken until 10:06 p.m., which was long enough interval that warrant could have been obtained. Further, state statute precluded any blood test being taken against will of defendant except under specific circumstances that did not exist in this case. State v Moylett (1992) 313 Or 540, 836 P2d 1329, appeal after remand 123 Or App 600, 860 P2d 886, review pending (Jan 18, 1994).

In DUI prosecution, trial court erred in admitting results of blood alcohol test where (1) test was performed after defendant had exercised his statutory right to refuse test, (2) statute specifically provided that testing should not be done after such refusal, and (3) there was no legitimate medical purpose for drawing blood; conviction was reversed and new trial was granted since test result had more than de minimum effect on jury. Commonwealth v Eisenhart (1992) 531 Pa 103, 611 A2d 681.

Trial court in DUI prosecution erred in admitting evidence of defendant's refusal to submit to intoxication test where defendant had not, as required by statute, been informed orally and in writing of consequences of refusal, one of which consequences was admissibility of evidence of refusal in subsequent prosecution; however, error was harmless in that, under circumstances of case, it had no discernible impact on jury. Schaum v State (1992, Tex App Dallas) 833 SW2d 644.

Trial court may have erred in admitting evidence of defendant's refusal to submit to alcohol- screening test where there was statutory right to refuse test; however, any such error was harmless in view of overwhelming evidence of defendant's intoxication while behind wheel of his car. State v Curavoo (1991) 156 Vt 72, 587 A2d 963.

In general, proof that a test of alcohol concentration was conducted in conformance with prescribed methods is necessary as a prerequisite to the admissibility of the evidence. 45 However, some courts take the view that under the terms of the particular statute construed, proof of conformance is not a prerequisite to the admissibility of the test results, but affects only the weight to be accorded the tests. 46

The prosecution, in using as evidence in a criminal case any of the various chemical tests to determine the alcohol content of the blood, must present prima facie proof that both the test chemicals and the sample are free from adulteration which could conceivably introduce error into the results of the test. 47 Moreover, the prosecution must prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, 48 that the blood analyzed was that of the defendant. 49 Also, the essential links in the chain of evidence relied on to identify the blood analyzed as being the blood taken, 50 and the custody and integrity of the blood specimen, 51 must be established. In proving the identity of a specimen, legal presumptions, such as that articles regularly mailed are delivered in substantially the same condition in which they were sent, may be relied on, unless rebutted; 52 but where the substance has passed through several hands, the evidence must not be left to conjecture as to who had it and what was done with it between the taking and the analysis. 53

◆ Reminder: The Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause does not require law enforcement agencies to preserve breath samples in order to introduce breath analysis tests at trial. 54

In civil cases also, it must be proved, as a foundation for the admissibility of evidence of tests for blood alcohol content, that the blood tested was that of the party or person in question, 55 that the continuous custody of the blood sample has been accounted for until its analysis for alcoholic content, 56 and that the blood specimen was properly preserved or cared for until the analysis, so that the results of the tests are reliable. 57 But it has been held that, in a civil case, the foundation laid for the introduction of evidence of a blood analysis need not preclude every possibility of a doubt as to the identity of the specimen or the possibility of a change of condition in the blood. 58 If the routine and procedures of a laboratory are shown by the evidence as having been commonly accepted by the medical profession, and the business of the laboratory is the securing, handling, and analysis of blood specimens, among other types of specimens, those routines and procedures ought to be acceptable to the courts. 59 The fact that the internal workings of a laboratory permit one or more employees to handle a blood specimen and to transport it should not bar the admission into evidence of the results of blood tests, nor should the fact that a blood specimen is something that could conceivably be tampered with make that evidence inadmissible. 60

It has been held that the testimony that the general practice was to place sodium fluoride in all bottles prepared for blood samples, coupled with the testimony of the chief toxicologist that no inaccuracies were detected, constituted prima facie proof as to the identity of the powder and the consequent accuracy of the blood alcohol test, and with this established, some burden must be placed upon the defendant to come forward with some proof, evidence, or indication that impugns the accuracy of the test. The admission of a blood-test result as to the alcoholic content of blood was held proper

Discrepancy in testimony as to amount of blood drawn from defendant for blood-alcohol test did not prove break in chain of custody or that there was tampering with blood sample where evidence showed that the blood was drawn by technician at hospital into two self-sealing vials which were labeled with defendant's name and number, vials were placed in envelope bearing name and number and put in refrigerator in custody of corrections officer at hospital by police officer, envelope was transported to state crime lab where it was tested, envelope was fastened with staples when it was received, and there was nothing to indicate that anyone had tampered with the tubes. Cunningham v State, 255 Ga 35, 334 SE2d 656.

Evidence that a specimen of blood to be tested for alcohol was taken from the defendant's body, placed in a container, and delivered to the sheriff; that the sheriff retained it in his possession until he delivered it to the person in charge of the city and county public health laboratory; and that the person to whom the blood was delivered at the laboratory made the examination and test of the specimen immediately after it was placed in his custody, was sufficient to establish the requisite tracing and identification of the specimen. Hoffman v State, 160 Neb 375, 70 NW2d 314.

In drunk driving prosecution, state was not required to produce as witnesses every person present when blood was withdrawn from defendant in order to make results of blood test admissible, and testimony of nurse, who was present, was sufficient to establish circumstances surrounding taking of sample. State v Sarvis, 265 SC 144, 217 SE2d 38.

In a beneficiary's action on an automobile accident insurance policy excluding coverage if the insured was under the influence of intoxicants, an uncertified copy of a report of the coroner, a medical expert, as to a blood alcohol test was inadmissible where the coroner was not positive whether the blood sample was taken in his presence, and the evidence did not show who took the sample, whether it was taken before the injection of embalming fluid, or how it was handled, if, in fact, it was actually taken from the insured's body. *Robinson v Life & Casualty Ins. 1. In General [1023-1027]

§ 1023 Nature of documentary evidence

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Documentary evidence is generally defined as evidence in the form of a writing or writings. 61 A document may be defined as any matter expressed or described upon any substance by means of letters, figures, or marks, or by more than one of such means, intended to be used for the purpose of recording that matter. 62

◆ Comment: Since the essence of documentary evidence is the recording of statements or information, it would appear that a sound recording of a statement may also be deemed documentary evidence. 63 The Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence refer to "writings" and "recordings," which consist of letters, words, sounds, or numbers, or their equivalent, set down by, among other things, handwriting, typewriting, printing, or mechanical or electronic recording. 64

§ 1024 Use and restrictions on use

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

To be admissible, documentary evidence, like oral testimony, must be relevant and competent. 65 To the extent that a document operates to establish a fact, it may be admitted as direct proof of that fact. 66 A properly admitted document is generally regarded as only prima facie evidence of a fact which may be disproved by other evidence. 67 Recitals in a document may, however, be binding on a party as admissions or declarations. 68

Documentary evidence, like oral testimony, must be relevant to be admissible. 69 Documentary evidence is also subject to general exclusionary rules such as the rule against hearsay, 70 the best evidence rule, 71 and the parol evidence rule. 72 Evidentiary rules concerning privileged communications may bar disclosure of documents relating to such communications. 73 Where, however, such a document comes into the hands of a third person who is neither a member of the protected relation nor an agent or representative of one who is, the document is no longer privileged, and admissible in evidence to the same extent as any other writing. 74

◆ Observation: In many instances, evidence codes specifically exempt certain documents from the application of exclusionary rules. Thus, Rule 803 of the Uniform Rules of Evidence and the Federal Rules of Evidence exempts from the hearsay rule numerous classes of documents such as records of vital statistics 75 family records, 76 and records of regularly conducted business activity, 77 while best evidence objections to the introduction of a copy of a document made by a process which accurately reproduces the original are largely obviated by Rule 1003. 78

If a person is not legally competent to testify, 79 the law will not permit him or her to make a memorandum of a fact and have it introduced as evidence of that fact. 80

§ 1024 ----Use and restrictions on use [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Assuming rule applies to discoverability as well as admissibility, documents provided to settlement committee in prison overcrowding case were not protected since plaintiffs did not seek documents to prove liability for or invalidity of claim or its amount, but to rebut defendants' claim of changed circumstances and thereby oppose petition to modify settlement agreement. Small v Hunt (1994, ED NC) 152 FRD 509.

Even if admission of other money orders sent by defendant from prison were improperly admitted in mail fraud trial for operating money order scam from prison, error was harmless since defendant had already confessed his involvement in scam and evidence against him was overwhelming. United States v Brown (1993, CA5 Miss) 7 F3d 1155.

Evidence of plaintiff's president's falsified documents which he sent to person in support of finder's fee for orders placed with plaintiff by defendant, although critical of president's character, were substantive evidence relating to disputed issues of relationship between plaintiff and defendant, custom and practice, damages, and plaintiff's reputation in plaintiff's action alleging that defendant misappropriated its trade secrets, specifically advertising insert it designed for defendant. Web Communications Group v Gateway 2000 (1995, ND Ill) 160 FRD 108, summary judgment gr, count dismd, motion den, motion to strike den (1995, ND Ill) 889 F Supp 316.

In § 1983 action by diagnosed paranoid schizophrenic who claimed that police officers used excessive force in subduing him while he advanced toward them with hatchet, district court did not abuse its discretion in excluding certified documents showing number of involuntary commitment petitions that had been filed in county court over three-year period since documents did not indicate in which, if any, police had played role and thus did not make fact of consequence more or less probable. McKeel v City of Pine Bluff (1996, CA8 Ark) 73 F3d 207.

Cocaine distribution defendant manifested adoption of paper found in his pocket upon arrest, hence paper containing three columns and letters, which were consistent with some of prices and quantities of cocaine defendant negotiated with agent, was admissible. United States v Carrillo (1994, CA9 Nev) 16 F3d 1046, 94 CDOS 1212, 94 Daily Journal DAR 2133.

District court in age discrimination case did not err in excluding summary of documents purportedly showing that older employees were placed at bottom of ranking lists and younger ones at top, where party offering summary was unable to explain meaning of item contained in summary. Vasey v Martin Marietta Corp. (1994, CA10 Colo) 29 F3d 1460, 65 BNA FEP Cas 663, 128 CCH LC ¶ 57709.

Computer software firm shall be permitted to introduce documents into evidence subject to requirement that all prejudicial titles be redacted, where competitor provided documents containing revenue and related statistics for certain types of software during settlement negotiations occurring after it had already lost on liability issue by default, and titles on some documents could be construed as admission that it had copied firm's software, because titles which could be construed prejudicially as admission of liability are protected under FRE 408, but tabular evidence in documents was otherwise discoverable. Computer Assocs. Int'l v American Fundware (1993, DC Colo) 831 F Supp

In prosecution for marijuana importation conspiracy court properly admitted deposit slips showing substantial deposits in single account in Panamanian bank and application form to obtain checks from that bank where documents were seized on vessel on which defendants and marijuana were apprehended, deposit dates preceded beginning of vessel's voyage, deposit slips were signed by defendants, bore typical bank markings, were kept in circumstances where person who has access to account would have kept important documents concerning account, and admission was consistent with general requirement to provide speedy, inexpensive and fair trial designed to reach truth. United States v Munoz (1994, CA11 Fla) 16 F3d 1116, 8 FLW Fed C 1, petition for certiorari filed (Jun 8, 1994).

Arresting officer's one-paragraph synopsis report of information received from number of undifferentiated sources, which contained term "refused Medical aid" (attributed to victim), was not Rosario material as to one lay witness where (1) that witness was not quoted or referred to as source of information in report, and (2) although officer who wrote report testified at trial, neither hearsay information nor exchange concerning medical aid related to subject matter of his testimony. People v Machado (1993, Sup) 159 Misc 2d 94, 603 NYS2d 273.

Monthly billing statements of law firm were properly admitted in evidence where there was extensive testimony by law firm as to how statements were compiled and reviewed for accuracy, and no irregularity as to time and task of recordkeeping or compilation of billing statements was evidenced either on direct or cross-examination. Fawer, Brian, Hardy & Zatzkis v Howes (1994, La App 4th Cir) 639 So 2d 329, cert den (La) 1994 La LEXIS 2533.

Go to Parallel Reference Table

In some cases, parties have been permitted to introduce documentary evidence notwithstanding admissions by opposing parties as to the contents of the documents or as to the facts sought to be proved thereby. 81 In other cases, however, it has been held that a document could not be introduced in evidence where all that it tended to prove had been admitted by the opposing party. 82 In such cases the document offered in evidence may be rejected on the ground that it is immaterial. 83

§ 1026 Right of party introducing document to impeach or explain it

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

One introducing documentary proof bearing upon an issue generally is bound by its recitals in that respect. 84 He or she is not allowed to impeach or contradict it, or to accept part which is in his favor and repudiate another part which is opposed to his claim or defense. 85 However, this rule does not apply to conclude an issue where the documentary evidence is not offered on that issue. 86 Thus, a party is not bound by the recitals of a document which he introduces for the purpose of impeaching it on the ground of fraud. 87 A party may also introduce documentary evidence prepared by his adversary without being bound by it. 88 And a party who introduces a document in evidence is not precluded from impeaching it by evidence which goes to its invalidity or which tends to show that it has not in law the effect that it purports to have. 89

◆ Observation: Notwithstanding the general rule against impeachment of one's own witness, a party may prove the truth of particular facts in contradiction of the testimony of his or her witness. 90 By analogy to this rule, a party introducing documentary evidence may prove that the actual facts are other than as stated therein. 91

2. Introduction of Part of Writing [1028-1031]

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table Go to Supplement
--

Under Rule 106 of the Uniform Rules of Evidence and the Federal Rules of Evidence, whenever a writing or recorded statement or part of it is introduced by a party, an adverse party may require him at that time to introduce any other part or any other writing or recorded statement which in fairness ought to be considered contemporaneously with it.

97 Under Rule 106, admission of the unadmitted portion of a document is not a matter of right, but rather rests within the sound discretion of the trial court. 98

Rule 106 permits a party whose adversary has introduced part of a document in evidence to require the adversary to interrupt the presentation of his or her case to introduce the remainder of the document. 99

◆ Observation: Rule 106 does not address whether a party who could, but does not, invoke Rule 106 during the course of an adversary's case may subsequently introduce the remainder of the document into evidence as part of his or her own case. It seems clear, however, that the Rule is not intended to preclude such tactics, and that failure to invoke the Rule during presentation of an adversary's case does not constitute a waiver of the right to introduce the remainder of the document at a later time as part of one's own evidence. 1

§ 1029 Introduction of otherwise inadmissible evidence

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

According to some authority, Rule 106 permits introduction of material which would otherwise be inadmissible under generally applicable rules of evidence. 2 A contrary view, however, holds that Rule 106 does not render admissible evidence that is otherwise inadmissible. 3 Even if Rule 106 permits the admission of otherwise inadmissible evidence, any material admitted thereunder is probably subject to restriction under Rule 105 as to the purpose for which it may be considered by the trier of fact. 4

§ 1030 Application to sound recordings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Rule 106 of the Uniform Rules of Evidence and the Federal Rules of Evidence is applicable to sound recordings of statements. 5 However, the mere fact that a proffered recording consists of excerpts from conversations which were much longer than the recording does not require admission of the complete recordings of the entire conversations for the sole purpose of allowing the jury to compare the length of the excerpted recording against the length of the entire conversations. 6 Where portions of a sound recording otherwise admissible under Rule 106 are inaudible and therefore of no value as evidence, the decision to admit or exclude the audible portions of the recording lies within the sound discretion of the trial court. 7

Go to Parallel Reference Table

Rule 106 of the Uniform Rules of Evidence and the Federal Rules of Evidence may be invoked to require the admission into evidence of related but separate writings, as, for example, a series of letters between the parties dealing with the same subject. 8 The question in such circumstances is what grouping constitutes a fair and reasonably complete unit of material; such a unit may be a single document or a number of documents. 9

◆ Comment: One writer has noted that there is almost no pre-Rule authority under which a proponent of one letter could be required to introduce another letter at the same time. 10

3. Requirement of Authentication [1032-1048]

a. In General [1032-1035]

§ 1032 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

To be admissible, documentary evidence must generally be authenticated, that is, it must be shown to be what its proponent claims it to be. 11 Authentication is the process by which the relevancy of a document is established by connecting it with a person, place or thing. 12 This requirement existed at common law, 13 and it has also been recognized by Rule 901(a) of the Uniform Rules of Evidence and the Federal Rules of Evidence, which provides that the requirement of authentication or identification as a condition precedent to admissibility is satisfied by evidence sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question is what its proponent claims. 14

◆ Comment: Rule 901(a) does not so much impose a requirement of authenticity as it assumes the existence of such a requirement. The source of the requirement under the Rules is probably best regarded as Rules 401 and 402, which define relevancy and make it a condition of admissibility. 15

Although Rule 901(a) speaks of authenticity as a condition precedent to the admission of evidence, common-law authority permits introduction of documentary evidence on the condition that a foundation for its introduction, including authenticity, be subsequently laid. 16

◆ Observation: The requirement of authentication or identification recognized by Rule 901(a) is not limited to documentary evidence, but applies also to real or demonstrative evidence. 17

§ 1033 Necessity and nature of authentication in particular circumstances

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Compliance with the requirement of authentication is not excused by the fact that an adverse party has received copies of documents or has failed to contest their legitimacy. 18 It is, however, permissible for parties to stipulate to the authenticity of a document and thereby forgo proof of the matter. 19 A party who could require proof of authenticity may also waive his or her right to require such proof. 20

The facts which must be shown to authenticate a document will vary according to the proponent's purpose in offering the document. A document such as a report of a scientific analysis of a substance taken from a human body is typically offered for the purpose of showing the truth of the statements contained in it; in such a case authentication of the report would include evidence indicating that the analysis was free from mistake or tampering. 21 If a document is offered to show that a particular person (such as an opposing party) made the statements contained in it, its authentication must include evidence that the document was in fact written by or is otherwise attributable to him or her. 22 But where the evidentiary value of a writing does not depend on a showing of the truth of its contents, or that a particular person wrote it, its authentication need not relate to such matters, but need only extend to whatever facts are necessary to permit a finding that the document is what its proponent claims it to be. 23 Authentication in the form of proof that a particular person authored or executed a document is not required when only the content of the document 24 or the fact of its existence 25 is at issue.

§ 1034 Effect of authentication

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Once prima facie evidence of a document's authenticity has been offered, the document is authenticated against all parties for the purpose of determining its admissibility into evidence. 27 Where a party admits the authenticity of a document in one case and the same document is proffered as evidence against the same party in a different case, the party against whom the evidence is proffered must, to keep the document out of evidence, rebut the force of his or her prior admission as to authenticity. 28

A prima facie showing of authenticity sufficient to admit a document into evidence does not remove the issue of its authenticity from the case altogether; it remains for the trier of fact to determine whether the document is in fact what its proponent says it is. 29 For this reason, evidence offered to authenticate a document must itself be admissible. 30

Doubts arising from the authenticity of a document based on the fact that the evidence of its authenticity was supplied by its proponent may affect the weight to be given such evidence, although they do not affect its admissibility. 31 The trier of fact may ultimately disbelieve the proponent's proof as to authenticity and entirely disregard, or substantially discount, the persuasive impact of the evidence. 32 It is generally still open for the opposing party to argue at trial that the document is not genuine, 33 that it is different from the one originally signed, 34 or is a forgery. 35 However, if after all the evidence is in the jury could not reasonably conclude that the authenticity of the document has not been established, the court may withdraw the issue from the jury's consideration. 36

§ 1035 Distinction between authenticity of document and admissibility

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Although a document must generally be authenticated to be admissible in evidence, its mere authentication does not invariably mean that it is admissible. 37 A document must meet generally applicable standards of relevance to be admissible. 38 Its admissibility may be barred by an applicable rule of privilege notwithstanding its authenticity. 39 The document may be hearsay, in which case, if the document is to be offered for the purpose of showing the truth of the assertions made in it, its proponent must, to secure its admission, establish that it comes within an exception to the hearsay rule. 40 Similarly, an objection to a document based on the "best evidence" rule cannot be overcome merely by evidence of its authenticity. 41

◆ Observation: Under Rule 403 of the Uniform Rules of Evidence and the Federal Rules of Evidence, a document which is both relevant and sufficiently authenticated may nonetheless be excluded if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice or confusion, or by considerations of undue delay, waste of time, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence. 42

b. Quantum and Type of Evidence Required for Authentication [1036-1039]

§ 1036 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The authentication requirement under Rule 901(a) of the Uniform Rules of Evidence and the Federal Rules of Evidence is in the category of relevancy dependent upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, and is governed by the principles set forth in Rule 104(b), which provides that when the relevancy of evidence depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the court must admit the evidence upon, or subject to, the introduction of evidence sufficient to support a finding of the fulfillment of the condition. 43 Thus, all that is required for admission of a document under Rule 901(a) is prima facie evidence of authenticity; 44 its authenticity need not be established beyond a reasonable doubt in order to warrant its admission into evidence. 45 Thus, to secure admission of a document allegedly belonging to the accused in a criminal case, the prosecution need only prove a rational basis from which the jury may conclude that the document did in fact belong to the accused. 46 The document need not be identified by the person from whom it was obtained if by other witnesses the prosecution can show a rational basis from which the jury can find that the document belonged to the accused. 47 The authenticity of a document may be established by circumstantial evidence. 48

Whether sufficient evidence of authenticity has been offered to permit admission of a document into evidence under Rule 901 is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court. 49 This is also the rule at common law. 50

§ 1037 Necessity of establishing chain of custody

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

It has been said that establishing the chain of custody of a document is not necessary under the Federal Rules of Evidence where there is prima facie evidence of its authenticity which satisfies the requirements of Rule 901(a).⁵¹ Thus, where a litigant sought the admission into evidence of seven completed job application forms, the fact that their chain of custody could not be established did not preclude their admission where other applications were identified by the applicants, and where it could reasonably be concluded that since all the applications appeared to come from the same source and were on the same form, and since the majority were conceded to be authentic applications for employment, a prima facie case for the authenticity of the seven disputed applications under the Federal Rules had been made.⁵²

However, under the substantially similar Uniform Rules of Evidence, the courts' discussion of the admission of documents has in some cases included an observation that a suitable chain of custody was established.⁵³

◆ Comment: Neither the Uniform Rules of Evidence nor the Federal Rules of Evidence specifically require demonstration of a chain of custody for admission of documentary evidence, although in many instances the authentication of a document will involve testimony as to its custody. The observation by courts in some cases under the Uniform Rules that a proper chain of custody was established for certain documents probably does not mean that such a showing was required for their admission; if a witness with knowledge had testified that the documents were what their proponent said they were, the documents probably would have been admitted with any question as to their custody bearing on their weight rather than their admissibility.⁵⁴

§ 1038 Necessity of subscribing witness' testimony—at common law

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

At common law, when a written instrument attested by a subscribing witness is offered into evidence, its execution must be proved by that witness if he or she is available as a witness and competent to testify, 55 unless the document is an ancient one which is self-proving. 56 Under this rule, evidence of the genuineness of handwriting of a party to show the execution of an attested instrument is not sufficient and does not dispose with the necessity of calling the attesting witness if he or she is available. 57 A witness is unavailable, and the necessity of eliciting his or her testimony is excused, if he or she is dead, 58 insane, 59 not competent to testify, 60 outside the jurisdiction of the court, 61 or otherwise incapable of being produced as a witness. 62 The attendance in court of an attesting witness is also excused if after diligent inquiry he or she cannot be found. 63

The rule relating to testimony of an attesting witness applies not only to deeds and other instruments of a formal character, but also to contracts, 64 and to instruments not evidencing contracts, such as notices to quit, receipts, and like papers. 65 The application of the rule is especially called for if the document is one which the law requires to be attested by subscribing witnesses. 66

At common law, an admission in court as to the execution of the instrument, made for the purpose of dispensing with proof by the attesting witness, will excuse the necessity of producing him or her, 67 but an extrajudicial admission will not suffice. 68

In proving the execution of an instrument other than a will, it is not necessary, if there are two or more attesting witnesses, to call more than one of them; the evidence of one of the attesting witnesses will establish a prima facie case for the execution of the instrument. 69

§ 1039 --Under statutes or codes of evidence

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table

The common-law rule requiring the execution of an attested instrument to be proved by at least one attesting witness has in many jurisdictions been modified by the enactment of statutes or rules of evidence providing that some documents require no attestation unless their genuineness is questioned, 70 or that the testimony of the maker of the instrument will suffice to prove its execution. 71 Under some statutes attested documents may be proved as though they had no subscribing witnesses. 72 An instrument which has been acknowledged or recorded according to law need not be proved by the testimony of an attesting witness. 73

Rule 903 of the Uniform Rules of Evidence and the Federal Rules of Evidence provides that the testimony of a subscribing witness is not necessary to authenticate a writing unless required by the laws of the jurisdiction whose laws govern the validity of the writing. 74

◆ Comment: It appears that no federal law requires such testimony. As an example of the sort of state laws within the scope of Rule 903, the Advisory Committee Note to Rule 903 pointed out statutes governing the execution of wills.

◆ Observation: The necessity of attesting witnesses' testimony to authenticate a will has in some jurisdictions been obviated by the enactment of statutes making wills "self-proving" through the execution by the attesting witnesses of affidavits attached to the will. 75 Furthermore, even where state law requires the testimony of a subscribing witness for the authentication of a will or other document, this requirement would apply only to proof of the execution of a document; where a document is offered for some other purpose, such as proof of delivery or that a writing constitutes an admission, Rules 901 and 902 would govern its authentication for that purpose. 76

Rule 901(b) of the Uniform Rules of Evidence and the Federal Rules of Evidence provides an illustrative list of methods of authentication or identification conforming to the requirements of the rule of authentication or identification as stated in Rule 901(a). 77 These illustrations are not the only permissible methods of authentication under the Rules. 78

◆ Comment: The examples given in Rule 901(b) are drawn largely from the experience embodied in the common law and in prior statutes. 79 They do not represent a dramatic departure from the common law, 80 and for that reason they may have persuasive effect even in states which have not adopted the Uniform or Federal Rules.

Under the Rules, the parties may stipulate to the authenticity of a document. 81 Other methods by which a document may be authenticated prior to trial include:

- A request for an admission as to its authenticity pursuant to FR Civ P, Rule 36
- Securing an admission of authenticity at a pretrial conference under FR Civ P, Rule 16
- Attachment of a document as an appendix to pleadings under FR Civ P, Rule 10(c)
- Use of interrogatories propounded under FR Civ P, Rule 33
- An admission of authenticity obtained in the course of a deposition taken pursuant to FR Civ P, Rules 30 and 31 82

§ 1041 Testimony of witness with knowledge; generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Under Rule 901(b)(1) of the Uniform Rules of Evidence and the Federal Rules of Evidence, testimony of a witness with knowledge that a matter is what it is claimed to be is sufficient to authenticate a document. 83 The opinion of a nonexpert witness is sufficient under the Rule if it is based on the personal knowledge of the witness. 84 To identify a document sufficiently to authenticate it, a witness need not be able to attest familiarity with every page of it. 85 However, a witness who lacks independent knowledge of the circumstances surrounding the making of a document cannot lay the foundation described by Rule 901(b)(1) for the admission of the document into evidence. 86

Even where testimony does not deal directly with any particular document, it may still be used as circumstantial proof of authenticity. Answers to interrogatories may be considered as authentication testimony where the answers directly identify a document's source or author, corroborate the contents of particular documents, indicate the presence of a purported author at a meeting or a meeting's limited attendance, or otherwise establish the document's authenticity. 87

◆ Practice guide: Rule 901(b)(1) does not require that any witness by his or her testimony alone authenticate or identify a particular document; any combination of items of evidence illustrated in Rule 901(b) will suffice as long as the standard set forth in Rule 901(a) is met. 88

Case authorities:

Radiotelegrams sent from or received by vessel which was dumping incinerator ash into oceans were authenticated by testimony of several witnesses, including ship's radio operator, captain, secretary in defendant's office where some were received, and defendant himself, as well as by their appearance and content, ship's log, and messages in radiotelegams and their relationship to each other. United States v Reilly (1994, CA3 Del) 33 F3d 1396.

In action by police officers against city for violations of Fair Labor Standards Act, policy statement offered by city is authenticated by testimony of director of personnel, because director contributed to document and prepared it for meeting with city officials, so director was witness with knowledge that document is what it is claimed to be. *Kermit C. The requirement of authentication as illustrated by Rule 901(b)(1) has been held satisfied by——testimony by a witness identifying a notepad as his own and stating that it was a record of money owed him, and that with the exception of one word all the handwriting in it was his own. 89

—testimony by a witness admitting the making of a prior inconsistent statement and that the statement was true, and testimony by another witness that the first witness had read the statement and agreed to its veracity. 90

—testimony by a bank president identifying a certificate of insurance (and a canceled check representing payment of an insurance premium), introduced to show that the bank which the defendant had robbed was federally insured. 91

—testimony by qualified representatives of insurance companies as to the companies' recordkeeping practices and procedures and that each of the insurance files sought to be introduced was prepared and kept by the company in the regular course of its business. 92

—testimony by an expert witness on soil testing, foundation engineering, and parking lot design that he conducted an investigation reported in a subsurface report concerning a shopping center site, including testimony at length about the investigation and its results and an identification of the subsurface report at trial. 93

—testimony of two expert witnesses called to authenticate certain Ukrainian employment forms introduced to show that the defendant in a deportation proceeding had been affiliated with the Ukrainian police during World War II, one expert testifying that the documents introduced were very similar to such documents that he had seen in the past, and the other expert, testifying that the documents were not executed after their purported dates. 94

—a union coordinator's testimony that an employee had in his presence signed an agreement authorizing the union to represent him. 95

While search warrant applications and supporting affidavits are best authenticated by submission of certified copies, they may be authenticated by the testimony of a police officer who identifies the documents. 96

The fact that the party against whom a document is to be offered in evidence produced the document may provide circumstantial evidence of its authenticity. 97 A document is also authenticated where a person in a position to vouch for its authenticity produces it and represents it to be the document described in a subpoena. 98 Such authentication can also be accomplished by counsel acting as agent of the person to whom the subpoena is directed, 99 The fact that documents are produced by a party in answer to an explicit discovery request, while not dispositive on the issue of authentication, is probative. 1

The place where a document was found can be circumstantial evidence of its authenticity, 2 and such evidence can be considered along with evidence of the document's distinctive characteristics. 3

In admiralty action for limitation of liability arising out of grounding of vessel and oil spill, report of United States Coast Guard containing investigating officer's conclusions regarding apparent cause of grounding, assessment of fault, and recommendations for future procedures is admissible, because report is trustworthy since (1) delay in preparation of final report was due to criminal investigations connected with accident, (2) there is no reason to suspect that report was prepared with possible bias with view to litigation, and (3) trustworthiness of report is not diminished by fact that it was prepared by Coast Guard investigator and not Marine Board of investigators. § 1044 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Under Rule 901(b)(4) of the Uniform Rules of Evidence and the Federal Rules of Evidence, the requirement of authentication or identification as a condition precedent to admissibility may be satisfied by appearance, contents, substance, internal patterns, or other distinctive characteristics, taken in conjunction with circumstances. 4 Under the Rule, the characteristics of the offered item itself, considered in the light of circumstances, afford authentication techniques of great variety. 5 The contents of a document can support a claim of authenticity, 6 as can its specificity, regularity, and official appearance. 7 Language patterns appearing in a document may indicate authenticity or its opposite. 8

§ 1045 Restricted knowledge of document's contents

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Under Rule 901(b)(4), 9 a document can be tied to a particular person, and thus authenticated, by a showing that it discusses matters of which only that person could have been aware. 10 The inference of authenticity raised by such a showing does not vanish, but rather diminishes, as more people know the information contained in the document. 11 Even if other persons have knowledge of the matters contained in the document, it is open to the proponent of the document to show that such persons in fact did not author the document. 12

◆ Observation: When this "knowledge" method of authentication is used, analysis of the document's handwriting or typewriting is not necessary. 13 Telephone conversations may also be authenticated by this method. 14

View Entire Section

The signature of an employee on a letter appearing below the company's letterhead, together with proof that the letter was mailed by someone, is sufficient to authenticate under Rule 901(b)(4) that a letter was mailed by the company, at least in the absence of something highly suspicious in the appearance or content of the letterhead itself or the accompanying written matter, or counterproof indicating mistake or fraud. 15 A three-page typed document, unsigned and undated, has been held sufficiently authenticated under Rule 901(b)(4) as written by the defendant in a drug smuggling prosecution, where the document (1) referred to the defendant's wife by name; (2) referred to various aliases proven by other evidence to have been used by the defendant; (3) contained a telephone number registered in the name of the defendant's long-time girlfriend; and (4) listed bank account numbers next to proven aliases of the defendant. 16

Authentication of a particular item has also been established under Rule 901(b)(4) by evidence—

—indicating that the cashier's check which its proponent sought to authenticate was purchased by a person having the same name as the defendant, that one of the members of the conspiracy to distribute heroin told the undercover agent that the source of the drugs was a particular town (where the check was sent), and that the defendant was shown to have been a senior partner in the enterprise. 17

—that the handwritten notes for which authentication was sought included the name of the defendant and initials of his coconspirators, notations of numbers of ounces of drugs, subtractions and additions of 6-digit figures, and phone numbers, and that the notes were seized from the defendant's residence. 18

—that documents introduced as the plaintiff's Sea Service records appeared to be standard official Coast Guard forms, that each was signed and dated by the plaintiff, that each included the plaintiff personal United States Merchant Mariners document number, and that the specificity, regularity, and official appearance of the documents increased the likelihood of their being authentic. 19

—indicating that Howard Johnson's place mats found in an accused conspirator's apartment originated from the restaurant and motel that the conspirators used as a meeting place, and depicted the first names of many of the conspirators involved in a particular smuggling operation coupled with various 4- and 5-digit numbers which were totaled, the surrounding circumstances indicating that the writings pertained to the conspiracy alleged and were made in furtherance of the conspiracy. 20

§ 1047 Process or system

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Under Rule 901(b)(9), evidence describing a process or system used to produce a result and showing that the process or system produces an accurate result is sufficient to meet the requirement of authentication or identification as a condition precedent to admissibility. 21 This method of authentication involves situations in which the accuracy of the result is dependent upon a process or system which produces it, such as X-rays or computers. 22 A court is not foreclosed by this Rule from taking judicial notice of the accuracy of the process or system. 23

In addition to X-rays and computer printouts, Rule 901(b)(9) may be used to authenticate evidence collected by means of electronic medical tests, 24 surveys and polls, 25 and test and experiment results generally. 26

◆ Comment: One writer has expressed the view that courts have trivialized the authentication requirement under Rule 901 as applied to computer printouts of business record information. Noting that under Rule 901(b)(9) a court may take judicial notice of the accuracy of a system or process, the writer points out that, although a court properly takes notice of the scientific and engineering principles underlying computerized data processing, a particular result generated by a given data processing system is not a proper subject for judicial notice, and that any particular printout offered as evidence must be authenticated as the accurate result of a system or process.

The writer contends that both the complexity of modern data processing and the significant time lapses between a transaction and its subsequent processing mean that computerized business records present complex hearsay problems that, like the multiple levels of hearsay within hearsay, call for independent and substantial Rule 901(b)(9) authentication. The hearsay rule exception in Rule 803(6) for business records, in combination with system authentication, should comprise the two components of a comprehensive foundation for computerized business records. 27

§ 1048 Methods provided for by statute or court rules

View Entire Section

Under Rule 901(b)(10) of the Federal Rules of Evidence, authentication or identification as a condition precedent to admissibility may be made by any method provided by act of Congress or by other rules prescribed by the Supreme Court pursuant to statutory authority. 28 Rule 901(b)(10) of the Uniform Rules of Evidence makes the same provision with respect to methods of authentication provided by the constitution, laws, or court rules of the enacting state. 29

Under Rule 910(b)(10), any method of authentication—whether provided by Rule 901, other rules, or statutes—which facilitates authentication with the greatest ease may be used. 30

Acts of Congress which provide methods of authentication or identification under the Federal Rule include:

- 7 USCS § 2217, which provides for the authentication of an oath, affirmation, or affidavit administered or taken by an officer, agent, or employee of the Department of Agriculture by the seal of the Department
- 8 USCS § 1454(e), which authorizes the Attorney General to make and issue certifications of any part of naturalization records of any court, or of any certificate of naturalization or citizenship, for use in complying with any state or federal statute or in any judicial proceeding
- 15 USCS § 1061, which provides for trademark acknowledgments and verifications by a person within the United States authorized by law to administer oaths, or, when made in a foreign country, before any diplomatic or consular officer of the United States or before any official authorized to administer oaths in the foreign country concerned whose authority is proved by a certificate of a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States or apostille of an official designated by the foreign country which, by treaty or convention, accords like effect to apostilles of designated officials in the United States
- 18 USCS § 3190, which provides for the authentication of depositions, warrants, or other papers, offered in evidence in an extradition hearing, by certification by the principal diplomatic or consular officer of the United States in the foreign country seeking extradition
- 22 USCS § 4221, which provides for the authentication by a consular officer of any oath, affirmation, affidavit, deposition, or notarial act made before such officer
- 28 USCS § 753(b), which provides for the authentication of records of proceedings by court reporters
- 28 USCS § 1738, which provides for the authentication of acts of the legislature of any state, territory, or possession of the United States, by the seal of such state, territory, or possession, and authentication of records and judicial proceedings of any court of any state, territory, or possession by attestation of the clerk and seal of the court, if a seal exists, together with the certificate of a judge of the court that the attestation is in proper form 31

- 28 USCS § 1739, which provides for the authentication of nonjudicial records or books kept in any public office of any state, territory, or possession of the United States by attestation of custodian of such records or books and the seal of his office annexed, if there is a seal, together with a certificate of a judge of a court of record of the county, parish, or district in which such office may be kept, or of a governor, secretary of state, chancellor, or keeper of the great seal of the state, territory, or possession, that the attestation is in due form and by the proper officers 32

- 38 USCS § 5712, which provides for the authentication by the seal of the Veterans' Administration of any oath, affirmation, affidavit, or examination administered or taken by employee

- 42 USCS § 269(b), which provides for the certification of bills of health by the proper consular or other officer of the United States over his official signature and seal

4. Best and Secondary Evidence [1049-1091]

a. In General; Best Evidence Rule [1049-1052]

§ 1049 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The best evidence rule provides that in establishing the terms of a writing, where such terms are material, the original writing must be produced unless it is shown to be unavailable for some reason other than serious fault of the proponent. 36

The best evidence rule does not purport to include substitution of weaker for stronger evidence, but merely comprehends the situation where evidence offered is clearly substitutionary in its nature, although directed to same issue as original evidence which is withheld. 37 The underlying purpose of the best evidence rule is the prevention of fraud or mistake in proof of the contents of a writing. 38 Accordingly, the rule does not preclude a witness from testifying to facts recorded in a writing from his or her personal knowledge. 39

Without using the term "best evidence," the Federal Rules of Evidence have adopted the best evidence rule, and provide that to prove the content of a writing, recording, or photograph, the original writing, recording, or photograph is required, except as otherwise provided in the Federal Rules of Evidence or by an act of Congress. 40

§ 1050 Limitations on scope of best evidence rule

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The best evidence rule applies only to documentary evidence, 42 which includes words and symbols recorded on any tangible thing. 43 The rule does not apply to duplicate originals of documents. 44 Nor does the rule apply to proof of the nature, appearance or condition of physical objects; such facts may be proved by parol evidence without the necessity of introducing the objects in evidence or accounting for their absence. 45

The best evidence rule applies, and an original is required, only when a writing is introduced to prove the contents of a writing, recording, or photograph, or to establish the existence of such documents; the rule does not come into play when a party uses a document to prove the existence of an independent fact, as to which the writing is merely collateral or incidental. 46

Additional specific limitations on the application of the best evidence rule may be provided by statute. 47

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In addition to the general limitation that an original is required only where the object is to prove the contents of a writing, recording, or photograph, 48 Rule 1002 of the Federal Rules of Evidence is limited in its application by Rule 703 of the Federal Rules, which allows an expert to give an opinion based on matters not in evidence. 49 For example, in a copyright infringement action, it was held that expert testimony could properly be used to develop proof of the defendant's gross revenues attributable to the infringement when financial records sufficiently detailed to show the infringer's profits were not available. 50 Further, hospital records, which may be admitted under the business records exception to the hearsay rule, 51 commonly contain reports interpreting X-rays by staff radiologists, who qualify as experts, and these reports may not be excluded from the records by Rule 1002 of the Federal Rules of Evidence. 52

§ 1052 --Testimony or written admission of party against whom item is offered

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Some jurisdictions follow the view that a party's own statements and admissions are admissible in evidence against that party, although such statements and admissions may involve what must necessarily be contained in some writing, deed, or record. 53

Under Rule 1007 of the Federal Rules of Evidence, the contents of a writing, recording, or photograph may be proved by the testimony or deposition of the party against whom offered or by the opponent's written admission, without accounting for the nonproduction of the original. 54 This rule recognizes the risk of inaccuracy with respect to oral admissions of what a writing contains, and therefore limits the use of admissions to those made in the course of giving testimony or in writing, unless the nonproduction of the original is accounted for and secondary evidence generally has become admissible under Rule 1004 of the Federal Rules of Evidence. 55

◆ Observation: FR Evid, Rule 1007 does not apply where the contents of a document are sought to be proved by the testimony of a party other than one against whom such proof is offered. 56

b. Exceptions to Best Evidence Rule; Circumstances When Secondary Evidence is Admissible [1053-1068]

(1). In General [1053-1058]

§ 1053 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Where the original writing, recording, or photograph cannot be produced by the party by whom the evidence is offered within a reasonable time by the exercise of reasonable diligence, secondary evidence of the contents of the writing may be admissible. 57 Basically, the rule requiring production of the original as proof of contents has developed as a rule of preference, and thus if the failure to produce the original is satisfactorily explained, secondary evidence is admissible. 58 The introduction of secondary evidence is generally permitted where the proponent is able to show that the original is lost or destroyed, 59 is not obtainable, 60 or is in the possession of the opponent. 61 In addition, a summary of the original evidence may be admitted where the original is voluminous or complicated. 62

The determination of whether to admit secondary evidence under one of these exceptions is within the discretion of the trial court. 63 In making such a determination, a court is not bound by the Federal Rules of Evidence except those with respect to privileges. 64 Clear and convincing evidence of authenticity and accuracy of secondary evidence is not required for admission under Rule 1004 of the Federal Rules of Evidence, but rather the proponent must present a sufficient foundation so that a reasonable juror could be convinced that the secondary evidence correctly reflects the contents of the original. 65

In jurisdictions which have adopted the Federal Rules of Evidence, the best evidence rule does not recognize "degrees" of secondary evidence. 66 If available and if properly authenticated, the proponent can present more than one type of secondary evidence to prove the contents of the original writing. 67 However, in some jurisdictions that have not adopted the Federal Rules of Evidence, where the original is not available and consequently a fact may be proved by secondary evidence, the proponent of the secondary evidence must produce the best secondary evidence which exists and which is within his or her power to produce. 68

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Secondary evidence of the contents of a writing, recording, or photograph is admissible where all of the originals are lost or have been destroyed, unless the proponent lost or destroyed them in bad faith. 69 The burden of proof in establishing loss or destruction of an original is on the proponent of the secondary evidence. 70 The proponent may be required to demonstrate some degree of diligence in the search for an allegedly lost or destroyed original in order to meet this burden. 71 The proponent also has the burden of additionally establishing, by clear and convincing evidence, the existence and execution of the original writing and the contents of the writing. 72

§ 1055 --Proving loss or destruction without bad faith on part of proponent

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Some courts condition the admissibility of secondary evidence upon a satisfactory showing by the proponent that the original has been lost or destroyed without bad faith,⁷³ or on a finding of a sufficient basis for concluding that the originals were lost or destroyed without any bad faith on the part of the proponent.⁷⁴ Under the Federal Rules of Evidence, the sufficiency of preliminary proof as to whether the proponent has lost or destroyed the original of a writing in bad faith is a matter of law for the court to decide, and the judge's determination as to the standard of proof applicable will not be disturbed in the absence of clear evidence of mistake amounting to an error of law.⁷⁵

The absence of any evidence of bad faith on the part of the proponent may be accorded significance by the court in evaluating a showing of loss or destruction of an original writing.⁷⁶

Bad faith will not be inferred where the proponent testifies that destruction of the original in issue was due to the negligence of employees.⁷⁷ Furthermore, the fact that the original was not inadvertently destroyed but was deliberately destroyed does not mean that evidence is not admissible under the Federal Rules of Evidence so long as the destruction was not in bad faith. 78 Even intentional destruction in violation of law or regulations requiring the preservation of the documents has been found not indicative of bad faith so as to exclude secondary evidence of the destroyed originals. 79

Loss or destruction of an original without bad faith can be shown by circumstantial evidence of a routine practice of destruction of documents. 80 On the other hand, inconsistent or incredible testimony not corroborated by any neutral or independent party, and suspicious circumstances surrounding the loss or destruction of alleged originals, can give rise to an inference of bad faith on the part of the proponent and influence the court to deny admissibility. 81

§ 1056 Original not obtainable

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Where no original can be obtained by any available judicial process or procedure, the original is not required, and other evidence of the contents of a writing, recording, or photograph is admissible. 82 However, the proponent of the secondary evidence must produce some evidence which has a logical tendency to establish the nonavailability of the original. 83 For example, when the original is in the possession of a third person, the inability to procure it from that person by resort to process or other judicial procedure, including a subpoena duces tecum as an incident to the taking of a deposition in another jurisdiction, is a sufficient explanation of nonproduction and no further showing is required. 84 When a subpoena has been served on the parties but the original has not been produced in response to the subpoena, the FR Evid, Rule 1004(2) standard of unavailability has been met. 85 Whether the subpoena issued is a trial subpoena or a grand jury subpoena makes no difference. 86 Under Rule 1004(2) of the Federal Rules of Evidence, a police officer's testimony as to the serial numbers of $10 bills examined at the defendants' residence has been held admissible, where the bills could not be found when the police officer returned to the residence with a search warrant, and where even assuming that the defendants were amenable to a subpoena directing the production of the bills at trial, it would be unrealistic to expect that they would have readily produced the bills that would have made the prosecution's case against them complete. 87

§ 1057 Original in possession of opponent

View Entire Section

The original is not required and secondary evidence of the contents of a writing, recording, or photograph is admissible if at the time when an original was under control of the party against whom the document is offered, that party was put on notice, by the pleadings or otherwise, that the contents would be a subject of proof at the hearing, and the opponent does not produce the original at the hearing. 88 Under Rule 1004(3) of the Federal Rules of Evidence, in order for secondary evidence to be admitted under such circumstances, the proponent must establish: (1) possession or control by the opponent; (2) demand or notice made by the proponent signifying that the document will be needed; and (3) failure or refusal by the opponent to provide the document in court. 89

§ 1058 Issues of fact for court or jury

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The admissibility of secondary evidence, including whether a proponent has demonstrated the foundational requirements, 90 and whether the proponent has made a sufficient showing of the search for the original documents and of the fact of loss of the originals, 91 is a determination to be made in the discretion of the trial court. 92 However, the issue is for the trier of fact to determine, as in the case of other issues of fact, when an issue is raised as to: (1) whether the asserted writing ever existed; (2) whether another writing, recording, or photograph produced at the trial is the original; or (3) whether other evidence of contents correctly reflects the contents. 93

Thus, the question whether the loss of originals has been established, or of the fulfillment of other conditions specified in Rule 1004 of the Federal Rules of Evidence, is for the judge; but Rule 1008 is meant to insure that the jury rather than the court decides a preliminary question of fact when it goes beyond the mere administration of the Rule preferring the original as evidence of contents, and into the merits of the controversy. 94

Under Rule 1008 of the Federal Rules of Evidence, the court decides the preliminary questions as to the lack of an original and whether the proponent has presented a sufficient foundation so that a reasonable juror could be convinced that the secondary evidence offered correctly reflects the contents of the original. 95 However, where a plaintiff offers secondary evidence of the contents of an alleged contract, after first introducing evidence of the loss of the original, and the defendant counters with evidence that no such contract was ever executed, a jury question is raised as to the existence of the contract by reason of FR Evid, Rule 1008. 96 This decision is not one for uncontrolled discretion of the jury, but is subject to the control exercised generally by a judge over jury determinations. 97 Thus, proof of routine practices may compel an inference that the original did in fact exist and may be a factor considered by the court in ruling upon the admissibility of secondary evidence. 98

§ 1059 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Under the best evidence rule, a witness may give a summary based on an inspection of a number of documents, or the summary itself may be admitted in evidence, if the underlying documents are so numerous and intricate as to make an examination of them in court impractical, 99 the underlying documents themselves are competent as evidence, 1 and the underlying documents are made accessible to the opposing party so that the correctness of the summary may be tested on cross-examination. 2

◆ Practice guide: The party seeking admission of a summary must give reasonable notice to the opposing party of its intention to use the summary as evidence. 3

The trial court has broad discretion in admitting or rejecting summaries and in imposing conditions under which they may be admitted. 4

The testimony of an accountant or auditor is frequently admitted in as summary evidence of documents or books, where the accountant or auditor has examined such documents and is able to testify as to their contents. 5

Under the Federal Rules of Evidence, the contents of voluminous writings, recordings, or photographs which cannot conveniently be examined in court may be presented in the form of a chart, summary, or calculation. 6 The originals, or duplicates, must be made available for examination, copying, or both, by other parties at a reasonable time and place, and the court may order that they be produced in court. 7 Since only "writings, recordings, or photographs" may be the subject of a FR Evid, Rule 1006 summary, such a summary cannot properly incorporate a witness' personal knowledge as the basis for any of the matters summarized. 8 Thus, FR Evid, Rule 1006 does not authorize the admission of summaries of testimony of an out-of-court witness, 9 and a witness may not present an oral generalized review of records which have not been admitted in evidence unless one of the other specific exceptions to the best evidence rule of FR Evid, Rule 1002 is shown to be applicable. 10 FR Evid, Rule 1006 does, however, authorize a nonexpert witness to summarize documentary evidence already presented by other witnesses. 11 The mere fact that the documents at issue are already in evidence assures neither that they can be conveniently examined in court nor that they had been examined in court. 12

An exhibit containing summaries of other exhibits in evidence may be admissible under FR Evid, Rule 1006 even though the other exhibits could have been and were examined at the time of their admission, where such other exhibits are numerous and would be difficult to comprehend without the summary exhibit. 13

◆ Practice guide: While the better practice is to require that summary charts be prepared by the witness, the fact that they were not prepared by the witness does not prevent their use where this does not hamper the opponent's ability to cross-examine the witness and the opponent is not prejudiced; 14 nor does FR Evid, Rule 1006 require that a summary be prepared by someone independent of the party offering the summary. 15

When a chart does not contain complicated calculations requiring the need of an expert for accuracy, the witness who presents the summary chart needs no special expertise. 16

◆ Caution: Summary charts can be misused and a trial judge must carefully handle their preparation and use 17 so as not to confuse or mislead the jury. 18

§ 1061 --Summaries as "evidence" which jury must consider

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Although the word "evidence" does not appear in the text of FR Evid, Rule 1006, summaries may be treated as evidence under this Rule where, in the court's discretion, examination of the underlying documents in a trial setting cannot be done conveniently. 19 This construction of FR Evid, Rule 1006 is compelled by the Rule's history and by the fact that the Rule requires only the availability of the underlying documents. 20 Where the underlying documents are introduced as well as the summaries, the court may instruct the jury that the summaries (and the witness' explanation of them) are not evidence in and of themselves and that if the summaries do not correctly reflect the underlying evidence the jury should disregard them. 21 The court may do this in order to insure that the jury will not rely on the conclusory matter in the summaries as independent proof of a defendant's guilt and thus prejudice the defendant's trial. 22

Summaries may be admissible in order to show what the underlying documents do not contain where those underlying documents would have been admissible for the same purpose. 23

Some courts take the position that pedagogical charts are not themselves evidence and, absent the consent of all the parties, should not be sent to the jury room with other exhibits. 24 Elsewhere, however, a pedagogical summary can itself be admitted in evidence where the trier of fact will find it helpful and will not be unduly influenced by the exhibit. 25 If a summary of a pedagogical nature is sent to the jury, it should be accompanied by a limiting instruction which informs the jury of the summary's purpose and that it does not itself constitute evidence. 26

◆ Caution: Because summaries are elevated under FR Evid, Rule 1006 to the category of evidence, care must be taken to omit argumentative matter in their preparation so that a jury will not be led to believe that such matter is itself evidence of the assertion it makes. 27

Where the requirement under Rule 1006 of the Federal Rules of Evidence that the underlying materials must be made available for examination or copying 28 cannot be met because those underlying materials are unavailable, it may be possible to admit the summary as secondary evidence of the underlying materials if the requirements of the lost-or-destroyed exception under FR Evid, Rule 1004(1) or the public records exception under FR Evid, Rule 1005 are satisfied. 29 There is also authority for allowing a summary of purely testimonial evidence, which, strictly speaking, could not be said to come within the requirements of FR Evid, Rule 1006, but could be allowed under FR Evid, Rule 611(a), 30 under which a court is required to exercise reasonable control over the mode and order of interrogating witnesses and presenting evidence so as to: (1) make the interrogation and presentation effective for the ascertainment of the truth; (2) avoid needless consumption of time; and (3) protect witnesses from harassment or undue embarrassment. 31

◆ Practice guide: Where some of the underlying materials are available and some unavailable, the summary can be admitted partly under FR Evid, Rule 1006 and partly under FR Evid, Rule 1004 or 1005. 32

§ 1063 Court's discretion

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The admission of a summary rests within the sound discretion of the trial court, and a decision whether to admit a summary will be reversed only for an abuse of that discretion. 33 There can be no abuse of discretion if the requirement of providing a reasonable time and place to examine the originals or duplicates by opposing parties is complied with, if a proper foundation as to the accuracy and authenticity of the summaries is laid, and if use of the summaries would save the court much time and inconvenience. 34 Even if it is determined that the trial court abused its discretion in allowing the use of summary charts, it may be that no reversible error will be found if the reviewing court determines that the defendant was not prejudiced because full cross-examination and the trial court's admonitions to the jury served to minimize the risk of prejudice. 35 The court has considerable discretion in determining whether the volume of the underlying documents is sufficient for the Rule to apply. 36

§ 1064 Foundation requirements

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Summaries are admissible only when a proper foundation has been laid. 37 This involves making the underlying documents available to the opposing party for inspection, 38 and showing the admissibility of the underlying documents. 39 A proper foundation for the introduction of a summary may be established through the testimony of the person who is responsible for the summary's preparation, 40 or the person who supervised preparation of the summary, 41 No adequate foundation is laid for the admission of a summary or list where the person offering the summary or list is unable to testify that such summary or list accurately reflects and summarizes the underlying material. 42 One proper method of laying a foundation for the admission of summary charts is to admit the documentation on which the summary is based. 43

§ 1065 --Making underlying documents available

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table

Rule 1006 of the Federal Rules of Evidence requires as a foundation not only that the contents of writings, recordings, or photographs be voluminous and inconvenient to examine in court, 44 but also that the originals or duplicates be made available for examination or copying by other parties at a reasonable time and place; unlike the original documents, the summaries themselves need not be made available in advance of trial. 45 Ordinarily, the "reasonable time" within which the originals or duplicates of the underlying materials must be made available will be at some point before trial, since the object is to give opposing counsel a meaningful opportunity to prepare challenges to the materials; however, the trial court may permit the matter to be dealt with during trial. 46 If the underlying documents are in fact made available for inspection, the requirement of the Rule is satisfied even if opposing counsel fails to take the opportunity to review the documents. 47 The right to examine the underlying data can be waived if it is not raised in a specific and timely fashion. 48

A computer printout of the information contained on a diskette constitutes a duplicate within the meaning of the FR Evid, Rule 1006 requirement that originals or duplicates of information contained in charts, summaries, or calculations must be made available for examination, copying, or both at a reasonable time and place. 49

Where the proponent of a summary cannot provide the opponent with the underlying documents because they no longer exist, the summary exhibit is inadmissible. 50

◆ Comment: The framers of Rule 1006 of the Federal Rules of Evidence clearly contemplated a pretrial resolution of any issues that may be raised concerning the use of summaries. The Rule, by requiring that the underlying documents be made available to opposing counsel, encourages counsel to eliminate objectionable matter and to stipulate to the form of the summary. This process greatly reduces the frequency of such objections as the prejudicial effect of summaries. 51

§ 1066 --Showing admissibility of underlying documents

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

As a condition precedent to the admissibility in evidence of a chart, summary, or calculation under Rule 1006 of the Federal Rules of Evidence, the proponent of the exhibit must lay a proper foundation for the admission of the original materials on which the exhibit is based, or for the parties to stipulate as to the admissibility of the original materials. 52 Since the proponent must establish that the underlying documents are themselves admissible, the same general foundation must be laid as if the underlying materials were actually being offered in evidence, minus the sort of item-by-item in-court identification which ordinarily attends that process. 53

A summary may be excluded if the underlying evidence is inadmissible because it is irrelevant. 54 Moreover, a summary based on underlying hearsay documents is inadmissible, 55 unless the proponent can demonstrate the admissibility of the underlying materials under an exception to the hearsay rule, such as that under FR Evid, Rule 803(6) for records kept in the ordinary course of business, 56 the public records exception (FR Evid, Rule 803(8)(C)), or the exception under FR Evid, Rule 803(24) for statements not specifically covered by any of the other exceptions but having equivalent circumstantial guaranties of trustworthiness. 57 A showing under FR Evid, Rule 803(6) must be made by the custodian of the documents or by some other qualified witness. 58 A summary of both inadmissible and admissible hearsay should not be admitted under FR Evid, Rule 1006; the proponent is entitled to admission only of those portions that he or she can demonstrate are entirely admissible. 59 Similarly, charts which are derived from exhibits that have been held inadmissible at trial, are inadmissible in a posttrial proceeding in the case. 60

◆ Observation: Exhibits admitted under FR Evid, Rule 1006 which merely summarize the information received by the jury through oral testimony or other exhibits received into evidence do not constitute hearsay. 61

Although the underlying documents must be admissible in order to establish a foundation for the summary, they need not be admitted into evidence in every case, since an absolute requirement of admission would be at odds with the last sentence of FR Evid, Rule 1006 providing that ordering the materials to be produced in court is discretionary with the trial judge. 62

◆ Practice guide: If summary evidence is independently admissible in its own right, such as a business record under FR Evid, Rule 803(6), there is no need to comply with FR Evid, Rule 1006 in order to have the evidence admitted. 63

§ 1066 --Showing admissibility of underlying documents [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court should not have considered affidavits as proof that the intent of the parties to insurance contracts was other than that appearing on the face thereof in an action determine which of two excess insurance clauses applied. The pleadings do not contain any allegation of fraud or mistake and the policy, as written, is not ambiguous. Use of the word "valued" rather than "valid" does not make the meaning of INA's clause uncertain because "valued" is a term of art which is used to describe a particular type of insurance policy. Universal Leaf Tobacco Co. v Oldham (1994) 113 NC App 490, 439 SE2d 179.

§ 1067 Accuracy of charts, summaries, or calculations

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

To be admissible under FR Evid, Rule 1006, summary evidence must accurately reflect the underlying documents. 64 However, charts need not be encyclopedic to be admissible. 65 A claim of inaccuracy does not make summary charts inadmissible where the trial court is satisfied that the summaries are reasonably accurate and there is evidence to support them. 66

While in some jurisdictions the trial judge must conduct a hearing to determine the accuracy of a summary, in other jurisdictions it is sufficient that the defendant be allowed to thoroughly test the summary through cross-examination of the witness who prepared it and that the jury be instructed as to the proper use of the summary; such safeguards protect against the prejudicial use of erroneous summaries. 67 Some courts require the trial court, out of the presence of the jury, to carefully examine the summary charts to determine that everything contained in them is supported by the evidence. 68

A party presenting a summary exhibit is under no obligation to include the opponent's version of the facts in its exhibit. 69 Alleged inaccuracies in the underlying documents themselves should not affect the admissibility of a summary under FR Evid, Rule 1006, since these can be brought out by way of cross-examination and simply affect the weight and sufficiency of the summary evidence. 70 When the figures on a chart have not been properly established and keyed to the underlying evidence, a cautionary instruction may be inadequate to avoid prejudicial error. 71

§ 1068 Distinction between Federal Rule 1006 summary and pedagogical device

View Entire Section

A summary admitted under Rule 1006 of the Federal Rules of Evidence must accurately reflect the contents of the underlying documents 72 and must not function as a pedagogical device that unfairly emphasizes part of the proponent's proof or creates the impression that disputed facts have been conclusively established or that inferences have been directly proved. 73

◆ Definition: A pedagogical summary is simply a demonstrative aid which undertakes to summarize or organize other evidence already admitted. 74

An expert witness may present a summary of one side's case based on testimony and physical evidence previously admitted; under such circumstances, it is proper to instruct the jury that the summary is not evidence, that the accuracy and reliability of the summary is to be determined by the testimony and exhibits admitted into evidence, that the expert's opinion is to be afforded only such weight as the jury feels it deserves, and that they could disregard the expert's opinion entirely. 75 Such evidence has been admitted as against objections that it improperly emphasizes and repeats the party's evidence and unlawfully bolsters the credibility of the party's witnesses. 76

Some summaries partake of the nature of both a FR Evid, Rule 1006 summary and a pedagogical device. 77 A party's assumptions included in a summary do not make the summary inadmissible, so long as the underlying supporting evidence has been previously presented to the jury, the court has made it clear that the ultimate decision as to what weight should be given to the evidence is for the jury, 78 and the opponent has the opportunity to challenge the assumptions or conclusions on cross-examination. 79

c. Application of Best Evidence Rule to Particular Types of Evidence [1069-1091]

(1). In General [1069-1073]

§ 1069 Tape recordings

Tape recordings generally fall within the scope of the best evidence rule, 80 although there is authority to the contrary. 81 Where the best evidence rule applies to tape recordings, if the ultimate inquiry in a case is to discover what sounds are embodied on tape recordings, the tapes themselves would be the "best evidence," but where the content of the tapes is not itself a factual issue relevant to the case and the inquiry concerns the content of the conversations, the tape recordings would be admissible as evidence of those conversations, but testimony by the participants would be equally admissible and sufficient to establish what was said. 82

§ 1069 ----Tape recordings [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Transcripts of telephone conversations that occurred in Spain were properly admitted under best evidence rule since prosecution was not at fault for absence of original tapes because they were destroyed by Spanish National Police in ordinary course of business, transcripts were evidence of recordings' contents, and Spanish police officers who initially transcribed recordings were cross-examined by defense counsel. United States v Ross (1994, CA11 Fla) 33 F3d 1507, 8 FLW Fed C 715.

In narcotics prosecution, no adequate foundation was laid for admission of tape recording of drug transaction where there was no evidence to show that tape was accurate recording of transaction. Wyatt v State (1992, Ala App) 620 So 2d 77.

In murder prosecution, trial court did not err in admitting tape recording of witness' shocked and emotional reaction to news of victim's death where defense counsel had opened door to such state-of- mind evidence by directing accusatory questions at witness suggesting that he, rather than defendant, had committed murder. Nelson v United States (1991, Dist Col App) 601 A2d 582.

In drug prosecution, copy of original tape recording was properly admitted, even though original was available, where original tape contained extraneous matters including every conversation informant had after being fitted with body transmitter, and entire conversation of informant and defendant had been copied. Lawson v State (1993, Ind App) 619 NE2d 964.

Tape recording of victim of alleged molestation and child welfare worker was properly admitted where (1) it was consistent with victim's testimony and rebutted defendant's charge of recent fabrication, or improper influence or motive; (2) welfare worker did not repeat any of conversation about molestation; and (3) victim could have been called for further cross- examination. Kielblock v State (1994, Ind App) 627 NE2d 816, reh den (Mar 8, 1994) and transfer den (May 16, 1994).

Best evidence rule did not bar admission of both tapes and transcripts of tapes of conversations monitored by state investigators, as contents and terms of tapes were not in dispute, and prosecution was attempting to demonstrate content of conversations, not content of tapes. State v Khalsa (1995, Iowa App) 542 NW2d 263.

In criminal prosecution, trial court did not err in failing to order prosecution to provide tape recording of witness' prior statement, which defense counsel wanted to use to impeach witness at trial, where defense counsel had transcript of recording that prosecution stipulated was accurate and counsel used transcript to impeach witness; best evidence rule did not apply since content of recording was not being used as evidence. State v Fleer (1993, Mo App) 851 SW2d 582.

In prosecution for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, trial court did not err in admitting tape recording of defendant's inculpatory statement even though entire statement was not taped, where only reason entire statement was not taped was that defendant started making statement before officer could get to his tape recorder and turn it on, and where both officers present testified as to substance of defendant's unrecorded statement. State v Peterson (1993, La App 4th Cir) 619 So 2d 786.

In rape prosecution, trial court did not err in refusing to admit tape recording of messages allegedly left by victim on defendant's telephone answering machine where, although messages were provocative and would have shed light on victim's and defendant's relationship, they were irrelevant to whether victim consented to sexual intercourse on date of alleged rape. State v Probst (1993, La App 1st Cir) 623 So 2d 79, cert den (La) 629 So 2d 1167.

Photographs, when properly identified, are admissible as appropriate aids to the jury in applying evidence relating to persons, things, or places, 83 but when they are offered as evidence of the person or thing photographed, they are mere secondary evidence supported by the testimony of a qualified witness. 84 However, the best evidence rule does not exclude photographic evidence merely because some witness can testify concerning the conditions portrayed in the picture. 85 Secondary evidence of the contents of an X-ray photograph is also regarded as inadmissible if the X-ray photograph itself is available. 86 However, the best evidence rule will not operate to exclude evidence concerning X-ray photographs which is purely explanatory in character and which is offered by expert witnesses in an effort to explain what might otherwise be unintelligible to the lay mind. 87

In a prosecution for theft of an iron fence, the photograph of the fence was admissible in evidence despite the defendant's contention that the best evidence was the fence itself, where the defendant made no showing that he was prejudiced by the introduction of the photograph rather than the fence itself, and the stolen fence was a four foot high pike wrought iron fence, and the recovered portion was 31 feet long, so that it was obvious that it would be impractical to introduce the fence into evidence. State v Dilworth (La) 358 So 2d 1254, 94 ALR3d 351.

§ 1071 Motion pictures

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The best evidence standard embodied in Rule 1002 of the Federal Rules of Evidence 88 applies to the introduction of films where the contents of a motion picture are what is sought to be proved, as, for example, in the case of a prosecution for interstate shipment of obscene films. 89 However, exact proof of the contents of allegedly obscene films under Federal Rule 1002 is not essential to prove that the films were seen in certain places, and oral testimony is sufficient to establish this element of the offense, since the best evidence rule is not applicable in such instances. 90 Where a witness testifies that a motion picture is an accurate reproduction of the matter it purports to portray, the fact that it is not the original film or that it has been cut to the extent of adding titles showing the time certain pictured events occurred does not necessarily make the film inadmissible. 91

§ 1072 Judicial records

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The best evidence of the contents of a judicial act or proceeding is the record of such act or proceeding, 92 or a copy of the record where copies are admissible or must be used as proof of such records. 93 Also, upon cross-examination of a witness it may be shown that he or she made contradictory statements in a prior suit, without producing the prior record on the subject. 94 Such practices do not violate the best evidence rule, but are merely an extension of the application of the rule to specific instances, where a strict interpretation would operate to defeat the ends of justice. 95

Secondary evidence of the contents of judicial records is admissible where it is shown that such records cannot be produced, as where they have been lost or destroyed. 96 Also, if the matter sought to be proved is not a matter of record, or if the record is incomplete in such respect, secondary evidence as to such matter is admissible. 97

There are contradicting views as to whether the best evidence rule applies with regard to written records of testimony from a prior proceeding to preclude oral testimony regarding such prior testimony. 98

In an action for the conversion of two promissory notes, in which it was claimed that the defendant had notice of the plaintiff's asserted interest in the notes by a previous action to which the defendant was a party, the petition in the previous action should, under the best evidence rule, be admitted in evidence to show that rights in the proceeds of the notes were litigated in the previous action, rather than testimony stating a conclusion as to what was alleged or claimed in such action. *Fourth Nat. § 1073 Foreign laws

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The best evidence rule applies where the law of a sister state or a foreign country is in issue. 99 The common law of another state or country may be proved by the testimony of lawyers, jurists, and others who are shown to have knowledge of such laws, such evidence being regarded as the best evidence under the circumstances. 1 However, with respect to written foreign law, parol proof is not admissible; the courts in most jurisdictions, in some instances under the mandate of a statute, 2 require a foreign statute to be proved by a duly authenticated copy of the statute, 3 or at least, by an official compilation of the statutes of such foreign jurisdiction. 4

If the interpretation of a statute and its application to a particular case require a knowledge of the judicial decisions and local practice, the face of the statute must be supplemented by evidence from experts familiar with the law of the jurisdiction in question. 5

Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 6 and the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, 7 a party who intends to raise an issue concerning the law of a foreign country must give written notice in his or her pleadings or other reasonable written notice, and the court, in determining foreign law, may consider any relevant material or source, including testimony. 8

§ 1074 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The best evidence rule is not restricted to public documents and writings; it applies with equal force to documents and writings of a private character. 9 Where the contents of a private document are in issue, the document itself is the best evidence of such contents, and it must either be produced or its absence must be properly accounted for before parol evidence regarding the contents of the document will be admitted. 10 Thus, where a contract is reduced to writing, the writing is the best evidence of the contract, and oral proof of the contract is not allowed unless some valid excuse can be shown for the nonproduction of the contract. 11

Where a private document or writing is not available, as where it has been lost or destroyed, 12 secondary evidence of its contents is admissible.

§ 1074 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

There was error which was not prejudicial in a first-degree murder prosecution where the court admitted statements from the victim's diary which recounted assaults upon her and a threat to kill her by defendant. Although the State contended that the statements were admissible as tending to show a bad relationship between the victim and defendant and were not offered to prove the truth of the statements, to the extent the State relies upon the assaults and threat contained in the diary to establish the relationship between Karen and defendant, it is using the diary entry for the truth of the matter asserted. To whatever minimal extent the victim's relationship with defendant is probative of defendant's state of mind, which was the central issue in the case, that probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger that the jury would misuse the diary entry, which sets forth two assaults by defendant upon Karen and a threat to take her life, as proof that defendant actually committed these acts. However, most of the diary entry was repetitive of other testimony, which went much further in describing the assault and threat. The only harmful statement in the diary entry not contained in the other testimony was that defendant had hit the victim in the head and slapped her across the face on a particular occasion, but there was other testimony of an assault around that time and, in light of the subsequent more severe assault and the weighty evidence against defendant, including his inculpatory statements, there is no reasonable possibility that the admission of the diary entry affected the outcome of the trial. The best evidence rule may be invoked to exclude the testimony of a witness of facts communicated by him or her to another by letter, where the letter itself can be produced.

13 The original letter is the best evidence of its contents and before secondary evidence of its contents is admissible, the nonproduction of the original letter must be accounted for, as by showing that it has been destroyed, 14 or that it is lost and diligent efforts to locate it have been unsuccessful. 15 Where the evidence shows the letter to be beyond the possession of the person seeking to prove its contents, secondary evidence of such contents may be received. 16 Moreover, parol evidence is admissible to prove, apart from its contents, the fact of sending a letter 17 and even to prove the contents of a letter where the letter is collateral to the matter at issue. 18

Where an issue involves facts stated in a telegram, under the best evidence rule the original telegram, if available, should be produced as proof of the contents of the message; secondary evidence of such contents is admissible only when the original telegram cannot be produced, 19 such as where it has been lost or destroyed. 20 This rule does not apply where the telegram was not reduced to writing, but rather was delivered orally. 21 Also, where the contents of the telegram are not in issue, parol evidence is admissible to show that a telegram was delivered. 22

The principal controversy regarding the application of the best evidence rule to the use of telegrams as evidence arises in the determination of what is an original telegram, whether the original is the communication sent or the one received; the answer depends largely upon which party was responsible for its transmission; generally, if the person sending the telegram takes the initiative and the telegraph company is thereby considered to be his or her agent, the message as delivered to the other party is the original. 23 However, if the person to whom the message is sent takes the risk of transmission or is the employer of the telegraph company, the message as delivered to the operator for transmission is considered the original. 24 Where correspondence is initiated by telegraph, the original of a message sent in reply is the one delivered to the telegraph company for transmission, and not the one received at the place to which it is sent. 25 The message actually delivered to the person to whom it is addressed is viewed as admissible as original evidence in an action against a telegraph company for damages for delay in the transmission of the message. 26 If there is only a single communication, the

§ 1077 Title instruments; deeds, leases, and mortgages

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In cases involving questions of title, ownership, and right to possession in the proof of deeds, leases, and mortgages and other instruments of title, the best evidence rule requires that the instrument itself be produced, unless a sufficient foundation is laid for the production of secondary evidence of the contents of such instrument, 28 such as by showing its loss or destruction 29 or that it is in the possession or control of an adverse party who has neglected to produce it after notice to do so. 30 Where, however, the issue of title or ownership, or the precise character thereof, is collaterally involved, the rule requiring the production of the instrument of title is relaxed to permit proof of a prima facie ownership from one properly qualified to offer such proof. 31

The best evidence rule does not require the production of an instrument evidencing the sale of property to prove the fact of sale; parol evidence is admissible for such purpose. 32

A person not in possession of real property, either actual or constructive, can prove legal title only by production of the original documents of title or legally authorized certified copies thereof, or if they cannot be produced and their nonproduction or absence is satisfactorily accounted for, then under the best evidence rule the contents of the original documents may be proved by parol evidence. Yates v State, 206 Tenn 118, 332 SW2d 186.

§ 1078 Memoranda and inscriptions

View Entire Section

The best evidence rule may apply to private memoranda to the same extent that it applies to private writings generally, and the memoranda where available must be introduced in evidence to prove the contents of them. 33 However, a memorandum that records a past recollection is not independent evidence of the matters noted in the memorandum; it is only secondary evidence of such facts, the primary evidence being the knowledge of the witness. 34 In the event such primary evidence is not available, resort may be had to the secondary evidence, or to the use of the memorandum. 35

A memorandum of the contents of a writing or document is not admissible in evidence to prove the contents where the writing or document itself is available. 36

There are certain writings and inscriptions which cannot be properly classified as documents, and to which the best evidence rule is not applicable, but which the law regards simply as matters of description and identity and as susceptible, primarily, of parol proof, such as a direction on a parcel, words written on a tag of a valise, labels attached to jugs or decanters and indicating their contents, price tags on garments, 37 and markings on railroad cars and waybills. 38 Under the best evidence rule, an "inscribed chattel" is an object which is both a writing and a chattel. 39 It is a matter of trial court discretion as to whether or not to admit secondary evidence of inscribed chattels in the face of a best evidence objection. 40 In addition, the best evidence rule does not extend to mere notices which persons are not expected to keep. 41

§ 1079 Corporate records, generally

Where the acts of a corporation are recorded in the corporate books and records, those books and records are the best evidence of such acts, and if available, the rules of evidence require their production as proof of those acts. 42 Secondary evidence is not ordinarily admissible to prove acts of a corporation properly evidenced by its records; 43 and if the charter or the statutes require records to be kept of all proceedings and declare those records the only proper evidence of the acts of the corporation, no other evidence is competent to prove such acts. 44 Where, however, corporate acts are not recorded in the books and records of a corporation, or where such books and records are so carelessly or imperfectly kept as not to show the acts of the corporation, such acts and resolutions may be proved by parol, in the absence of any provisions of law requiring such matters to appear of record, thereby making the record the only evidence of them. 45

A witness shown to be familiar with the books or records of a private corporation or business may testify as to the contents of such books or records, where, from the circumstances of the case, such testimony is necessary to an expeditious disposition of the issue or an understanding of the matters contained in such books or records. 46 The position of a person in the corporation on whose behalf the witness testifies may be shown by the witness' parol testimony, without contravening the best evidence rule. 47

Matters which are not properly subjects of record, although entries are made of them, may be proved by the testimony of the person making the minutes. 48

Where it is shown that corporate records are not available or cannot be produced, as where they are lost or have been destroyed, secondary evidence of the contents of such records is ordinarily admissible. 49

§ 1080 Meetings of corporate directors, stockholders, or members

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The written record of meetings of directors, stockholders, or members of private corporations or associations, is the best evidence as to the proceedings at such meetings, and under the best evidence rule oral evidence is inadmissible to prove what took place, or to prove the contents of the minutes at such meetings unless a sufficient foundation is laid by explaining the absence of the written record. 50 However, where no record is made of the proceedings at meetings of directors, stockholders, or members of private corporations, or such record has been lost or destroyed, 51 or the records of a corporation are absent from the jurisdiction, or otherwise not available, 52 oral evidence is admissible to prove the proceedings of such meetings, or to prove the contents of the record. Similarly, oral evidence is also admissible to prove such proceedings or contents where there are omissions in records, or where the records do not purport to be complete accounts of the proceedings of meetings. 53

The best evidence rule does not exclude oral proof which merely supplements or explains the recorded proceedings and meetings of directors, stockholders, or members of private corporations. 54

In addition, secondary evidence which contradicts the corporate minutes may be admitted where all relevant corporate documents are in evidence. 55

§ 1081 Books of account

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Books of account are generally regarded as primary evidence of the facts they contain and are admissible 56 as the best evidence of such facts without proof of the unavailability of other evidence. 57 Insofar as books of account are admissible as evidence of the facts they contain, the best evidence rule usually requires their production, or some excuse for nonproduction, before allowing proof of a secondary character. 58 An audit made by, or testimony given by, a private auditor is inadmissible in evidence as proof of the original records, books of account, or reports, since such proof is not the best evidence available 59 and also violates the rule excluding hearsay testimony. 60

The best evidence rule does not require the introduction of books of account and does not exclude parol testimony as to the contents of such books where a witness has independent knowledge of the facts stated in the books. 61 Where the proponent is attempting not to prove the contents of books of account, but to show certain facts independent of the books, such books are not necessarily the only evidence nor the best evidence of the facts, and the proponent may make out his or her case as to such facts by the testimony of a witness. 62 Books of account are always competent to refresh the memory of a witness who has personal knowledge of a transaction, and the fact that the latter may be more accurate is a matter for the jury. 63 In addition, as a relaxation of the best evidence rule, the court may allow in evidence a summary of books or documents which are voluminous or complicated. 64

Public records and documents of a public character are subject to the operation of the best evidence rule, and where the contents of such records or documents are material to an inquiry, the records or documents, or in proper cases, certified copies of such records or documents, 65 should be produced. 66 Proof of a secondary character is permitted only where a valid excuse can be given for the nonproduction of such records or documents 67 or certified copies, 68 such as their loss or destruction. 69 Thus, official accounts of the Treasury Department, 70 grants of public lands, 71 and record of confiscation by the government, 72 are provable only by the original records or by certified copies, in the absence of a sufficient foundation for a finding of their loss or destruction so as to permit secondary evidence. In an election contest, the best evidence to determine the results of an election are the official ballots themselves, providing they remain in substantially the same condition as at the time of the election and have not been altered. 73

Case authorities:

Judicial findings of fact are not public records within meaning of hearsay exception; judge in civil trial is not investigator, but judge, and committee comments to rule make drafters' intent plain—that rule is to relate to findings of agencies and offices of executive branch. Nipper v Snipes (1993, CA4 SC) 7 F3d 415, 38 Fed Rules Evid Serv 23.

Hearsay statements on 911 tape can be admitted into evidence as either public record or business record, but because citizens who call 911 are not under any duty to report, recorded statement by citizen must satisfy separate hearsay exception, such as present sense impression or excited utterance; statement by 911 caller who is witness to violent arrest of suspect by police could qualify under either exception. Bemis v Edwards (1995, CA9 Or) 45 F3d 1369, 95 CDOS 640, 95 Daily Journal DAR 1149.

Certificate of Indebtedness introduced in U.S. summary judgment motion is admissible as exception to hearsay rule under FRE 803(8) in action to recover on promissory note, where certificate is public record of public office, because presumption is that document was accurately prepared and debtor has failed to point out any circumstances indicating lack of trustworthiness. United States v Wright (1993, DC Utah) 850 F Supp 965.

Written statements by police officers that persons other than defendant occupied and sold drugs from apartment in which defendant was arrested were not admissible under business records exception to hearsay rule since nothing indicated that statements reflected officers' personal knowledge or that information was provided by someone with personal knowledge acting in regular course of business. United States v Warren (1994, App DC) 42 F3d 647.

§ 1083 Appointment and authority of public officers

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The commission of a public officer is the best evidence of his or her appointment and authority. 74 However, the best evidence rule is relaxed somewhat with regard to proving the appointment and acts of public officers; such appointment and acts may be proved by the fact that one acted notoriously as a public officer, without producing the commission of appointment. 75

§ 1084 Proceedings of public bodies

View Entire Section

The official records of proceedings of public bodies, such as municipalities or city councils, furnish the best evidence of the acts recorded in those records, and parol testimony is not admissible in the absence of evidence that such records have been lost or destroyed. 76 Thus, a municipal ordinance is properly proved by the introduction in evidence of the original record of the ordinance, properly identified and authenticated. 77 However, where no such record exists of a specific matter, parol proof is admissible in explanation or proof of such matter, without violating the best evidence rule. 78 In addition, parol evidence is admissible when the proponents are not seeking to prove the contents of an official record. 79

(5). Duplicates and Copies of Originals [1085-1091]

(a). In General [1085, 1086]

§ 1085 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

◆ Definition: A "duplicate" is defined for purposes of the best evidence rule as a counterpart produced by the same impression as the original, or from the same matrix, or by means of photography including enlargements and miniatures, by mechanical or electronic re-recording, by chemical reproduction, or by other equivalent techniques which accurately reproduce the original; copies subsequently produced manually, either handwritten or typed, are not within this definition. 80

The best evidence rule has a limited application to duplicate originals, 81 which are admissible to the same extent as an original unless (1) a genuine question is raised as to the authenticity of the original, or (2) under the circumstances it would be unfair to admit the duplicate in lieu of the original. 82 In addition, some jurisdictions will not allow duplicates to be admitted in lieu of the original where there is a genuine question raised as to the continuing effectiveness of the original. 83

The burden of challenging the admissibility of a copy rests with the party against whom it is offered, 84 and claims that the original is inaccurate or that admission of a copy would be unfair must be based on substance, not mere speculation. 85 Whether offered documents constitute accurate duplicates and can be accepted in evidence is within the sound discretion of the trial court. 86

Where there is a dispute about changes made on duplicates, both the claimed unaltered version and the corrected counterpart should be admitted. 87

§ 1086 Unfairness or necessity as grounds for requiring original

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Under Rule 1003 of the Federal Rules of Evidence, reasons for requiring an original may be present when only a part of the original is reproduced and the remainder is needed for reasons of fairness, such as where the remainder is necessary for cross-examination, or where the remainder may disclose matters that qualify the part offered or that are otherwise useful to the opposing party. 88 Thus, admission of a file copy of a deed under FR Evid, Rule 1003 is unfair for the purpose of proving the contents of the original conformed copy where the most critical part of the original conformed copy is not completely reproduced in the "duplicate." 89 However, the copy may not be unfair for other purposes and may be admissible for these purposes. 90

It may be unfair to admit a duplicate where the original could be of considerable value in ascertaining its authorship. 91 Similarly, photocopies of canceled checks may be excluded from evidence under FR Evid, Rule 1003 where the proponent cannot satisfactorily match copies of the backs of the checks with copies of the fronts. 92

(b). Particular Types of Duplicates [1087-1091]

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table Go to Supplement
--

In some jurisdictions, photographic or photostatic reproductions of writings are not considered duplicate originals and are therefore not admissible in evidence over the objection of an adverse party unless a basis is laid for their reception by showing that the original cannot be produced. 93 However, other jurisdictions have generally modified these common-law restrictions as to photocopies by statute or court rule; thus, "photocopy" or "xerox" copies of writings may be admitted into evidence as duplicates unless a genuine question as to their authenticity is raised. 94

§ 1088 Carbon copies

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Where a carbon copy of a document or writing is signed or otherwise executed with all necessary formalities, it ranks as a duplicate original as would a copy produced by any other method and formally signed or attested; each copy of the writing is regarded as primary evidence of its contents and may be admitted in evidence without any explanation of the failure to produce the original. 95 Even where it does not appear that the carbon copy was signed or otherwise executed by the parties, such a copy may be regarded as a duplicate original and hence admitted in evidence without explanation of the failure to produce the first, or "original," document or instrument. 96

A carbon copy will not be received in evidence without proper authentication or identification; testimony that the carbon impression offered was made at the same time and by the same writing instrument, whether pencil or typewriter, as the first or "ribbon" copy, is essential. 97

§ 1089 Re-recordings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Audio or video re-recordings are generally admissible as duplicates, provided their authenticity is established and the original recording is made available for comparison.

98 Re-recordings may also be admitted as duplicates where it is established that the original recording has been lost or destroyed. 99

Duplicates of tape recordings can be introduced at trial if the requirements of FRE Rule 1003 are complied with. United States v Di Matteo (CA11 Fla) 716 F2d 1361, 14 Fed Rules Evid Serv 575, vacated on other grounds, remanded on other grounds 469 US 1101, 83 L Ed 2d 767, 105 S Ct 769, on remand (CA11 Fla) 759 F2d 831, 17 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1445, cert den 474 US 860, 88 L Ed 2d 143, 106 S Ct 172.

The best evidence rule did not preclude the admission in evidence in a criminal prosecution of a re-recording of a tape-recorded conversation between the defendant and a prosecution witness where the re-recording became necessary because the original was of insufficient quality to be understood, where the original was also received in evidence, where the re-recording was properly identified by the witness involved and by the person who made the re-recording, and where the defense objection to the admission of the re-recording failed to indicate that any controversy existed as to its content; in effect, the re-recording was the original recording made useable by resort to approved electronic recording techniques, rather than a copy used contrary to a best evidence rule "to prove the content" of the original. People v Marcus (2nd Dist) 31 Cal App 3d 367, 107 Cal Rptr 264, 58 ALR3d 594.

The trial court in an attempted murder prosecution properly admitted copies of tape recorded conversations between defendant and an undercover agent, notwithstanding the fact that the copies had been enhanced by an expert in voice analysis to make the spoken words more audible, where the original recordings had been satisfactorily authenticated, and where the expert authenticated the enhanced copies as faithfully reproducing the originals. Golden v State (Fla App D1) 429 So 2d 45, petition den (Fla) 431 So 2d 988 and cause dismd (Fla) 438 So 2d 833.

Generally, as to the admissibility of sound recordings in evidence, see § 583.

Footnote 99. State v Booker (Del Super) 547 A2d 618; Hurt v State (Okla Crim) 303 P2d 476.

In a prosecution for first-degree murder, the best evidence rule did not preclude the admission into evidence of a second recording made of the defendant's statement to police, although the first recorded statement was not admitted, where the first statement was of poor quality and the second statement was recorded on same cassette thus erasing the first statement. State v McDonald (La) 387 So 2d 1116, cert den 449 US 957, 66 L Ed 2d 222, 101 S Ct 366, habeas corpus proceeding (CA5 La) 806 F2d 613, cert den 481 US 1070, 95 L Ed 2d 874, 107 S Ct 2465.

The admission into evidence of a re-recording of a taped conversation did not violate the best evidence rule where the erasure of the original tape was not a deliberate attempt to destroy evidence, there was evidence that the secondary tape recording was an accurate and faithful reproduction of the original tape, and there was a proper foundation laid for the playing of the tape to the jury. People v Hughes (3d Dept) 124 App Div 2d 344, 507 NYS2d 285.

§ 1090 Copies of public records

View Entire Section

The contents of an official record, or of a document authorized to be recorded or filed and actually recorded or filed, including data compilation in any form, if otherwise admissible, may be proved by a copy, certified as correct or testified to be correct by a witness who has compared it with the original; and if a copy which complies with the foregoing cannot be obtained by the exercise of reasonable diligence, then other evidence of the contents may be given. 1 Rule 1005 does not purport to guarantee the admissibility of the contents of public records, but only insures that these contents may, under the conditions specified in the Rule, be introduced by way of copy rather than production of the original, if the contents of the original record are "otherwise admissible." 2

The requirement of "otherwise admissible" under FR Evid, Rule 1005 is not satisfied where a copy of a public record is incapable of being properly authenticated, or where it would be unfair to admit the copy in lieu of the original under FR Evid, Rule 1003. 3 Public records call for somewhat different treatment than other documents, since removing them from their usual place of keeping would be attended by serious inconvenience to the public and to the custodian, and thus under FR Evid, Rule 1005, no explanation need be given for failure to produce the original of a public record where a copy offered in evidence has been certified or compared. 4

Under FR Evid, Rule 1005, no other evidence of lesser dignity is admissible when a properly recorded copy is available as evidence, and only if both the original and a FR Evid, Rule 1005 copy are unavailable may other evidence be used. 5

In lieu of certification of a copy as correct, a copy of a public record may be testified to be correct by a witness who has compared it with the original. 6

◆ Practice guide: Even where copies of an official record are neither certified as correct nor sworn to be correct by a witness who has compared them with the originals in accordance with FR Evid, Rule 1005, these copies may be admissible in evidence under FR Evid, Rule 1003 where no issue is raised as to their authenticity. 7

§ 1091 --Particular records admissible

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Rule 1005 of the Federal Rules of Evidence authorizes the admission into evidence of computer printouts of data gathered by a federal agency. 8 However, the contents of a computer printout purporting to report what a person had told an IRS employee were not "otherwise admissible" within the meaning of FR Evid, Rule 1005, where the printout did not fit within any of the hearsay exceptions set forth in FR Evid, Rule 803 and 804. 9 Certified exemplified copies of docket entries from a state court are admissible under FR Evid, Rule 1005. 10

While the language of FR Evid, Rule 1005 encompasses deeds, mortgages, 11 and other documents filed in a county recorder's office, it is the actual record maintained by the public office which is the object of the Rule, not the original deed from which the record is made; if the original deed is returned to the parties after it is recorded, it is not a public record as contemplated by FR Evid, Rule 1005. 12 However, FR Evid, Rule 1005 cannot be applied to exclude all evidence of an original deed other than the recorded version when the very question in controversy is whether the original deed was correctly transcribed onto the recorded version. 13

Since vehicle registration is a matter of public record, a copy of an official vehicle registration certificate is admissible in evidence under FR Evid, Rule 1005 where there is testimony by a witness that the copy was made from the original. 14

5. Parol or Extrinsic Evidence Affecting Writings [1092-1145]

a. In General; Parol Evidence Rule [1092-1105]

§ 1092 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The parol evidence rule generally precludes the use of extrinsic evidence to vary or contradict the terms of an unambiguous and integrated contract—a writing the parties have adopted as the expression of their final agreement. 15 The rule applies to exclude both oral and written extrinsic evidence. 16 It also operates to exclude evidence that varies or contradicts both the express and the implied terms of a written agreement. 17

The parol evidence rule applies when there is a single and final memorial of the understanding of the parties; when that takes place, all prior and contemporaneous negotiations are excluded and are superseded by such written memorial. 18

The parol evidence rule is subject to many limitations and exceptions 19 which permit the reception of parol evidence where, for example, the writing in question is ambiguous 20 or incomplete, 21 or is attended by fraud, 22 mistake, 23 or erroneous omission. 24 In addition, since application of the rule presupposes the existence of a valid contract, parol evidence is admissible for the purpose of challenging the existence or validity of the contract. 25

Case authorities:

In action by bank to recover deficiency from guarantors of promissory note, parol evidence that alleged oral statements made by employee of bank assured guarantors that 5-year term could be substituted for 3-year term was inadmissible, where note and written guaranty plainly stated term as 3 years and, absent ambiguity in loan documents, parol evidence tending to vary or contradict terms had to be excluded. *Cusimano v First Md.
